Mitterrand opens way for Sarajevo airlift

FROM TIM JUDAH AND DESSA TREVISAN IN BELGRADE

TWO French air force planes packed with aid were heading for Sarajevo last night hours after a dramatic six-hour visit by President Mitterrand of France appeared to have opened the besieged city's airport for international relief supplies. Just before he left the Bosnian capital M Mitterrand and his party were forced to take shelter as Serbs and Bosnian forces skirmished around the airport but the nresident was said not to have been in immediate danger. M Mitterrand's mission stunned his European Community colleagues who had been with him at their meeting in Lisbon. They were unaware that the 75-year-old had begun the journey to Sarajevo has been surrounded by Bosnian Serb forces for almost three months and hunger is now widespread among its 300,000 inhabitants. The people of Sarajevo, recently convinced that the world had abandoned them to their fate jubilant as they heard of the president's visit.

Two hours before the president flew in, a Minerrand aide had tried by telephone to seek assurances from General Mackenzie that it was safe to land on the airport runway. That call apparently led the president to decide to leave his plane in Split in favour of a military helicopter, which could land in widely varying circumstances and terrain.

Back in Split, the sunsplashed Croatian port which is nowadays home to tens of thousands of Bosnian and Croatian refugees, locals shook their heads in disbelief.

JOHN Major will embark on a high-risk strategy of staking his reputation, and possibly his political future, on his ability to persuade his wavering MPs to back the Bill ratifying the Maastricht treaty this autumn.

On his return from the weekend's European Community summit in Lisbon, close colleagues dismissed stories suggesting the prime minister would offer his party a "back me or sack me" ulti-

But they talk of his deep personal commitment to the Maastricht treaty and say he has not ruled out making ratification a vote of confi-dence issue, although no serious consideration has been given to the idea. He says he has "given his word" and will not break it.

Mr Major is notably taking every opportunity to scotch any notion that he sympathises with the rebels and says scornfully in private that he did not see any election manilestos from Conservative candidates suggesting they did not agree with the government's policy on Europe.

Reporting to MPs today Mr Major will repeat his priority for pressing ahead with enlargement of the Community and return of powers from Brussels to nation states. But a truer guide to the success of his tougher protreaty stance will come on Thursday when the Commons and Lords discuss Britain's agenda for the EC presidency. The debate will demonstrate how deep the "ditch

Class war Cinderellas bash Oxford ball

BY MICHAEL HORSNELL

A WAVE of bash-the-rich protests by Class War activists turned the glittering end-of-year balls at University College and New College, Oxford, into revels to be remembered less for the champagne fizz than for the presence of the "fuzz" at the weekend.

Police were called in to break up disturbances which led to the arrest of 27 protesters for various public order offences. They were all given police bail in the early hours of yesterday. Last night police were on standby for further class-bashing, this time in the city of Bath, where extremists threatened to disrupt the huge open air concert by José Carreras after spraying the bandstand and concert box office with less than affectionate messages to opera lovers.

Up to 100 louts waded into revellers as they arrived at the gates of University College for the Shelley Ball in bonour of its poet alumnus, spitting, jeering and setting fire to bales of hay behind the college, causing damage to student cars.

One angry undergraduate, aged 20, said: "We can't understand it. Unless someone took a severe dislike to Shelley's poetry there can be no explanation. It is disgusting and most upsetting.

The balls have got nothing to do with wealth. We save long and hard for our tickets and we just come here to let our hair down with a bit of style t the end of the year."

Two police officers and one protester were treated for minor injuries in clashes after so-called "new age" travellers joined the Class War warriors in the night of arson and may-hem at University College. Meanwhile at New College the front quad gate had to be shut to prevent demonstrators running amok in the authority.

Inspector Paul Kimbrey, of Thames Valley police, said of the University College demonstration: There were numerous complaints of aggravation to patrons of the ball throughout the night, although there is no evidence to suggest that they tried to storm the grounds. It didn't though stop the ball going ahead, though some of the students, particularly the girls, were very frightened. The situation was under control by midnight." The recession has already taken its toll of traditional Oxbridge college revels this year with the cancellation of several balls, but all of the 1,300 £75 tickets for the white-tie Shelley

office in Royal Victoria Park in Bath. Leafiets were also left on cars urging "travellers", the homeless and "class warriors" to demonstrate at the

The far-left anarchic group claimed that fans had paid more for a ticket than most people get as a week's wages and vowed to disrupt the concert, at which 15,000 were due to turn out to hear Carreras sing in front of the city's Royal Crescent. Concert organisers, who branded the group's actions as puerile, said that private security and policing arrangements were sufficient to combat any problems.

The executive producer. Greg Lynn, said that with half the tickets costing £20 prices compared favourably with those charged for rock concerts.

By JOHN O'LEARY, EDUCATION CORRRESPPNDENT

JOHN Major has toned down his criticism of comprehensive schooling and ruled out a national return to selective education in a letter published today.

The clarification of government education policy comes in the latest stage of a lengthy correspondence with Fred Jarvis, former general secretary of the National Union of Teachers. Ministers are keen to remove selection as an issue before the publication of next month's White Paper on

In a letter to Mr Jarvis last February, Mr Major seemed to support a return to a grammar school system. He wrote then: "The problem of low standards stems in large part from the nature of the comprehensive system which the Labour party ushered in in the 1960s, and the intellectual climate underpinning it that has tended to stress equality of outcome at the expense of equality of opportunity."

Challenged by Mr Jarvis to justify this view, the prime minister replied last week that he had not meant to criticise comprehensive schools. "In fact, my earlier

Appeal to extend curriculum

THE national curriculum should be extended to cover all young people up to the age of 18 or 19, whether or not they are in full-time education, a report recommends today (John O'Leary writes).

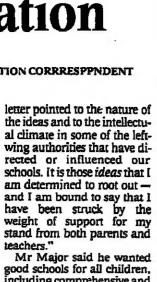

A paper prepared for the National Commission on Education, an independent enquiry into educational developments for the next 25 years, proposes that young people aged over 16 should combine vocational and academic study. School leavers would continue in a traineeship until they were 18, sharther education, training and work experience.

The present mix of education, training and youth employment in Britain was not designed to meet the needs of a modern economy, and has not adapted to the requirement for high-quality, broad-ly based education at all ages and levels, the report says. Training has to be integrated with vocational and higher education if a world-class workforce is to emerge.
The report, compiled by a working group of educationalists, industrialists and a management consultant, says: "Clarity of roles is particularly important: international comparisons suggest that mixed systems, in which neither the state nor employers take clear responsibility for post-16 education and training, are likely to be less effective." The system would be national, but not uniform or centrally directed.

The national curriculum covers four key stages for children aged between five and 16. A new Key Stage Five would consist of a core curriculum in maths, science, technology. English and another European language.

good schools for all children, including comprehensive and grammar schools, with parental choice a key determinant of policy. That was why opting out had been intro-duced with the freedom to enlarge schools, alter their character or specialise.

The prime minister denied the charge made by Mr Jarvis in a previous letter that he was "not serious" about addressing the problems of the worst performing schools. Many such schools were to be found in Labour authorities. he said, and the White Paper would make proposals to tackle them.

Mr Jarvis said yesterday that the prime minister had retreated from his original position on comprehensives but had left many questions unanswered, notably on selection. The criteria for the reintroduction of grammar schools and their effect on neighbouring schools had not been addressed.

In a response delivered to Downing Street on Saturday, Mr Jarvis said: "Clearly, in February you were indulging in a blanket condemnation of comprehensive education to which comprehensive schools were entitled to take exception, and many of them did. And as I, and many independent commentators, have pointed out, your attempt to link your criticism of comprehensive education exclusively with the Labour party ignores the fact that it also has many Conservative supporters."

Appealing for wide-ranging consultation on state education, Mr Jarvis added: "I accept that you have made it clear that you want the best from every child. That is an aim I certainly share. The crucial question is not whether one subscribes to the aim but what policies are needed to achieve it. I believe many of your government's policies actually militate against that

A contractor-led rescue, which is being canvassed by transport analysts, would enable the construction companies to raise sufficient capital to get the scheme started in exchange for a percentage of the revenue once the line became operational. Private sector companies have applied a similar principle to construction projects in the past. The Queen Elizabeth II bridge at Darriord in Kent was built with private sector capital, and the pro-posed extension of the Docklands light railway to Lewisham in southeast London is to be built with private sector funds. Some analysts believe that there is no reason why the same principle could not be applied to the Jubilee line project.

Efforts to save the Jubilee line scheme, which would run from Green Park to Stratford via Canary Wharf in Docklands, can be expected to intensify in the coming weeks. Some observers fear that unless the missing private sector contribution is raised by July

Confession evidence will be allowed

By Frances Gibb, legal correspondent

UNCORROBORATED confessions are not expected to be outlawed as evidence by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice in spite of being central to many recent miscarriages of justice.

The commission is finding the question of confessions to be one of the most difficult. Its members will pay a second visit to Scotland next month to look at the Scots law on this and at other aspects of the criminal justice system there. Members are thought to favour new rules requiring confessions to be treated more circumspectly by juries rather than a blanket ban on uncorroborated confessions

as called for by some after cases such as that of the Guildford Four. The commission is also expected to recommend ending the defendant's right to silence; abandoning the prosecution opening speech in some cases; increasing powers of judges to intervene and manage trials; and increasing fees for criminal work to improve both the quality of barristers taking criminal trials and, consequently, of circuit judges.

Other recommendations are likely to include the video tape recording of police interviews in the charge room; an independent forensic science service; and a body to take over from the Home Office the task of examining alleged miscarriages of justice. In spite of expectations that

Army experts defused two mortar bombs found in a van in Lisnaskea, co. Fermanagh. They also dealt with an incendiary device in an abandoned car.

Lemonade lands navy cadets in hospital

Five Royal Navy cadets were taken to hospital suffering from dehydration at the weekend as the hor, sultry weather continued. Temperatures rose to 28C (82F) and may be a degree or two higher today before thunderstorms sweep in tonight or tomorrow. The cadets, on a training course in Portsmouth, were told to drink plenty of water while sailing in the harbour. Instead, they drank lemonade and complained of feeling unwell after sleeping below decks aboard HMS Kent. Lieutenant Commander Bernard Harper said that the four girls and a boy aged 13 to 17 "appeared to have ignored advice to drink plenty of fresh water. As a result they suffered mild dehydration."

Surgery assault alleged

The Crown Prosecution Service is considering assault charges against a surgeon after he allegedly removed a woman's womb and ovaries without her consent, it was confirmed yesterday. The woman, aged 51, complained to police after she was admitted to St Thomas Hospital, south London, last April for an operation on the membrane lining the uterus - an endometrial resection. The woman claimed that after the operation she was told the surgeon had performed a hysterectomy and removed her ovaries. Scotland Yard confirmed that the woman, who has not been named, had lodged a complaint of assault, alleging that she had not given her permission for the hysterectomy. St Thomas Hospital today issued a statement saying that it supported both the patient's right to question a clinical decision and the surgeon's right to take such decisions during an operation. The hospital said that a woman would be unable to have children after an endometrial resection.

Love in a cold climate

A Scottish professor has been given grants totalling almost £20,000 to study how the people of the Western Isles used to conduct their love lives. His research, which spans the period from 1855 to 1984, will seek to establish how marriage and reproductive patterns have changed over the years. Professor John Clegg, of Aberdeen University, said: "It is an unusual society in that it still has the crofting economy which has disappeared from most of the rest of Scotland. It is also dominated by the fishing way of life which has a culture all of its own." One islander suggested that as the council had lost £23 million in the BCCI collapse, the money could be better spent. ### Skippers hunt for nets

Cornish fishermen spent much of yesterday searching for the nets that they lost last week off the Isles of Scilly when French trawlers sailed through their lines. As they searched, about 20 miles off the islands, they kept a close watch on French trawlers that have returned to the area after last week's flareup when one was boarded by the Royal Navy. The netter St Uny was back in Newlyn, Cornwall, where its skipper Mervyn Smitheram said that he had found only one and a half out of 150 nets - and that they were ripped to shreds. "It was like looking for a needle in a haystack out there." Mr Smitheram, 32, said. He estimates that he has lost nets worth £7,500. Two other Newlyn netters, the Sardia Louise and Britannia IV, were out at sea yesterday trying to find their lost nets.

Trust to reopen house inspired by the San Vitale basilica

Spectacular view: the house is known for interior decorations such as a frieze made of feathers

A la Ronde, the 16-sided house near Exmouth in Devon, will re-open to the public on Wednesday after extensive repairs and renovation. The house was built in 1798 by two unmarried cousins. Jane and Mary Parminter, after their return from a grand tour of Europe. It is said to have been inspired by the octagonal basilica of San Vitale at Ravenna, in Italy,

After a succession of owners, it was bought with ten acres of grounds by the National Trust in January last year. One of the trust's main concerns was to prevent further house building which threatened the house's setting and spectacular views At the time it was built,

The public is being invited to visit A la Ronde, a 16-sided house above the Exe estuary, John Young writes and residents included Lady Byron, Lady Nelson and the poet George Crabbe. The site chosen was on a hill about two miles outside the town and Jane Parminter is said to have designed it herself. although she might have had help from John Lowder, one of the architects of Georgian Bath.

Originally it had a thatched roof, but that was replaced with tiles in Victorian times when nine dormer windows were added. It is particularly noted for its unusual internal decorations, including a frieze made from feathers and, at the top of the central octagon, a gallery decorated with thousands of shells. The house contains many other unusual paintings and decorations, including pictures made from cut paper. The architectural historian John Cornforth described it as the most remarkable demonstration of ladies' arts of the Georgian period.

During the past winter more than £200,000 has been spent on rewiring, a new heating system. drainage, damp-proofing, remedial work on the windows and landscaping. John Rolfe, the house's custodian, said that investigations had revealed extensive rot in mainbeams under the ground floor. During the repairs the furniture and pictures have been kept in atmospherically-controlled stores and the frieze and shells protected from accidental damage by masking tape.

An appeal for £500,000 was launched in April last year and has raised £322.000. Francis Byng, the fund-raising manager, said that restoration would take several more years.

One question is whether to redecorate the house entirely or to leave it in the slightly shabby condition with which past occupants would have been more fa-miliar. It will be open from Sundays to Thursdays.

Legal loophole puts 100,000 drink-drive convictions at risk

By Michael Horsnell

A LOOPHOLE in the drinkdrive laws could mean that at least 100,000 drivers convict ed of refusing to give a breath specimen to police in the past 20 years could have their convictions quashed at a huge cost to the exchequer

In a test case two High Court judges have rejected an appeal by the Crown Prosecu-tion Service against the acquittal of a man under the Road Traffic Act because the standard wording of the charge is flawed. Lord Justice McCowan and Mr Justice Pill ruled in favour of Terry Corkoran, 43, an unemployed man from Merseyside who was acquitted by magistrates at Bootle in January last year.

The ruling comes at an embarrassing time for the government. On Wednesday tough new laws on drunken and dangerous drivers will come into force.

The Corkoran case is under urgent review by Home Of-fice lawyers while the CPS, which has been refused leave to appeal to the House of Lords, considers a perition to the Lords' appellate commit-

SUPERMARKETS and DIY stores were open yesterday despite the Law Lords' ruling that councils can seek injunctions against Sunday opening without risking bills for traders' lost profits.

B&Q, which has spearheaded the fight for seven-day trading, reported "business as usual" at 230 stores in England and Wales, Tesco, which had 220 stores open "by public demand", said that in the hot weather trade was especially brisk for barbecue items and soft drinks. Sainsbury's said the company was keeping to its strategy of opening nearly 400 stores every Sunday, attracting some 750,000 shoppers. Roy Edey, a campaigner against Sunday trading, said he was calling on Lord Sainsbury, as chairman of Sainsbury's, to issue a directive that his stores would immediately stop "unlawful" Sunday trading as a result of the Law

Lords' judgment. Mr Edey, a retired solicitor from northwest London who has lought a number of court actions over the issue, said: "Lord Sainsbury, as a legislator and recently appointed Knight of the Garter, has a duty to set an example." The Law Lords ruled last week that councils in England and Wales could seek injunctions against Sunday traders without having to underwrite any lost profits if seven-day trading is eventually allowed under European law. The responsibility for meeting the bills for aborted injunctions could be shifted to the government if the European Court decides that Britain's shops acts are inconsistent with the Treaty of

Parliamentary draughtsmen are being blamed for the duplicity involved in the charge which accuses defen-dants of breaching either one two sections in the 1972 act involving drink-driving or being drunk in charge.

Mr Corkoran, who was not available for comment, was charged, in the standard way. with "failing without reasonable cause to provide a specimen of breath for analysis in the course of an investigation under section four or section five of the Road Traffic Act".

Such charge sheets do not specify which section and as each action involves different allegations carrying a variety of penalties, the prosecution falls between two stools. Sean Sexton, Corkoran's solicitor, who spotted the loophole, said: "The charge for refusing a specimen of breath should specify in what circumstances the refusal took place. The reason is that if the police say You were driving a car or attempting to drive and you refused to give a specimen' you have to be disqualified for a minimum 12 months. If, on the other hand, they allege 'You were drunk in charge of a car and refused a speci-men', disqualification is

Mr Sexton added: "The consequences, we do not know. But my view is that none of those charges since the 1972 act should ever have been heard and many people are entitled to have their convictions quashed, and their fines and costs refunded. It could go beyond that. If people have lost their licences and should not have, they should be entitled to compensation for that and for loss of job and increased insurance premiums. The implications are potentially highly

Since 1972 between 5,000 and 8,000 people a year have been convicted of failing to provide a breath specimen at a police station.

A spokesman for the CPS said: "We have asked for a transcript of the appeal decision and we shall be studying it. We have 14 days in which to decide whether to petition the appellate committee. We cannot comment on the ramifications of this case." The Home Office said: "We are taking this case very seriously and will be looking into the implications should it be proved that the wording of the charge is flawed."

The Road Traffic Act taking effect from Wednesday includes new offences of dangerous driving and causing death by dangerous driving. Extended driving tests for people convicted of dangerous driving, rehabilitation courses for drink-drivers and possible disqualification after iust two speeding offences are among its provisions. Motorists convicted of causing death by dangerous driving could face five years' jail and a minimum of two years' disqualification. The dangerous driving offences replace the existing offences of reckless driving and are based more on an objective standard of driving and less on the driver's state of mind. It is thought this will make it easier to secure convictions.

A MEDIEVAL wall painting cycle has been discovered hidden under 750 years of grime at Chester Castle.

"It could be the most important wall painting discov-ery for 20 years," said David Park, head of the conservation of wall paintings at the Courtauld Institute in London. Four of his students have been working with English Heritage restorers on the vaults and walls of the Chapel of St Mary de Castro in the castle, "Under the completely white veil we have discovered some stunning paintings," said Caroline Babbington, of English Heritage. The paintings include the Visitation and the Infancy of Christ, as well as exquisite half-length angels and medallions. Only a fragment remains of the most lively scene of all: the Miracle of Theophilus. It tells of a priest of that name who sells his soul to the Devil in exchange for a bond (represented by a scroll). In fear of his future, Theophilus appeals to the Virgin, who arranges for him to get it back. Originally, according to an 1810 engraving, the image had depicted the moment when the Virgin returns his soul to him in the form of a bond, while the Devil attempts in vain to snatch it back. Now all that can be seen, despite deaning work, is the Devil's shaggy horn.

Miss Babbington believes the paintings result from two specific hands, one elegant and conventional for that time, the other "forward-looking. Gothic". The whole ensemble, she says, has "the quality of a miniature, uncorrupted by later repainting". The paintings were probably commissioned by Henry III during the 1230s at the time when he took over the castle from the Earls of Chester.

Penny Bool, of the Cham-pagne Bureau, said yester-day: "I do not remember seeing champagne at £8 a bottle for four years. Super-markets have been able fact take advantage of the fact that some producers have a tremendous stock of wine. From the consumer's point of view, it is excellent news."

The cheap champagne does not, in the opinion of connoisseurs, bear compari-son with wine from the grandes marques, which still command prices of about £14 to £18 a bottle for their non-vintage wines. That

Complaint over music leads to siege

By Rosemary Smith

A COMPLAINT by a neighbour about loud music led to an armed siege by police yesterday at a house on the estate at the centre of last year's Tyneside riots.

Police last night rejected accusations of victimisation and over-reaction from relatives after a man who had allegedly been seen holding a gun was arrested without injury. Police cars and vans, along with armed officers and dogs, surrounded the house on the Meadow Well estate at 8.00am yesterday. A police helicopter circled

Police believed Alan Denley, 28, was armed but angry relatives denied that and said the police response was another example of victimisation on the estate following the riots. As police marksmen surrounded the house Mr Denley's girl friend Gillian Stewart and her three children, Paul. 6, Carl. 3, and Clare, eight months, left the Police allowed Mr Denley's aunt to speak to him and shortly after midday he walked out of the house hands above his head and was arrested.

The family said: "This is another example of the kind of police victimisation people on the estate are having to live with. This was a row about playing soul music yet police have turned out with a helicopter, guns and dogs.

Supt Al Tail, the officer in charge of the operation, last night backed his officers. He said two uniformed officers saw a man waving a gun in his garden and he had no option but to bring in armed police. The fact that it was the Meadow Well estate made no difference to his handling of the operation.

"The response would have been exactly the same anywhere. The fact that it was the Meadow Well had nothing to do with it," Mr Tait said.

"When you consider this man was seen by police with a gun I do not think we overreacted. I am totally happy that the matter has been resolved quietly without injury

New arts centre proposed

BY SIMON TAIT, ARTS CORRESPONDENT

A SCHEME to create a centre for the performing arts in London, funded from lottery proceeds, as a monument to the millennium, has been put to John Major. It is proposed to replace both the £250 million Covent Garden development and a suggestion for a new opera house on the South Bank.

Denis Vaughan, a musical conductor who is executive director of the Lottery Promotion Company but who wrote to the prime minister and David Mellor, the heritage secretary, as a private individual, has posed a scheme involving the restoration and up-grading of facilities in five existing West End buildings, plus a new one.

The proposal is costed at £190 million to purchase the buildings not already in national possession and restore them, as well as building a chamber opera theatre. ☐ The Royal Opera House would be restored and modernised to give better accoustics, backstage facilities, storage space and front of house services at a cost of £45 million.

☐ The Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, would be bought from Stoll Moss Theatres for ballet and opera at a cost of £40 million

☐ The Lyceum Theatre, in the Strand, almost derelict now, is owned by the Theatres Trust and leased to Brent Walker. Its lease would be bought to restore it as a dance house or a lyric theatre devoted to nineteenth century operetta for £30 million. ☐ The Coliseum, in St Martin's Lane, which the government gave English National Opera £10.8 million to buy from Stoll Moss three months ago, with the remaining £2 million of the price coming from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts: £15 million would be spent on refurbishment.

International Whaling Commission meets in Glasgow this week to review worldwide moratorium

Diving for cover: a humpback off Cape Cod, Massachussetts. This week's meeting in Glasgow will decide whether the Japanese can resume commercial whaling of the minke

Greens hope Gummer backs whale sanctuary

BRITAIN'S formal reaction to a proposal to turn a vast area of ocean surrounding the Antarctic into an international whale sanctuary will be given by John Gummer, the agriculture and fisheries minister, when he opens the 44th annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission in Glasgow (IWC) this

Environmentalists are fervently hoping he will an-nounce his support, because the plan, put forward by France, is seen as a safeguard against the resumption of commercial whaling by Japan on the minke whales of the southern Atlantic, the last relatively untouched stock of the south of Argentina and Chile. More than half the world's whales are believed to feed and breed in these seas, in particular the southern Atlantic minkes, thought to number more than 750,000.

The sanctuary, taking in all waters below 40 degres south, would encompass the entire southern ocean in a great circumpolar sweep, including

One large international whale sanctuary already exists, in the Indian Ocean, where commercial whaling has been banned by the IWC, down to 55 degrees south, since 1979. This sanctuary is up for renewal at the Glasgow meeting.

Mr Gummer said last week that Britain was sympathetic to the idea of both sanctuaries. "We want to see whether we can produce a package which would continue and extend the concept of sanctuary," he said. There are some very real practical difficulties which we are actively trying to overcome."

ries of an Antarctic sanctuary, are potentially threatened because commercial whaling, although out-lawed worldwide since 1986, has not yet been permanently banned. It was halted by a moratorium put in place while the scientists of the IWC attempted to devise a method of hunting a given whale stock without driving it to the edge of extinction, as has too often happened in the past.

A complex computer programme intended to do this, based on whale population dynamics and known as the revised management procedure (RMP), is nearly ready. and is likely to be presented to the full commission in Glasaccepted, the clear implication would be that commercial whaling could recom-

The few remaining whaling nations, mainly Japan, Iceland and Norway, are pressing for this to happen and growing impatient with delay. Last year loeland, angered by the commission's refusal to let it restart whaling while the RMP was still being developed, gave the required year's notice of withdrawal from the commission, which expires tomorrow. If the loclanders leave and the Norwegians follow suit, as they have hinted they will, they may restart commercial whaling independently. To management procedure is sooner or later, the RMP will do so would invite interna- adopted, the Japanese will at be introduced and whaling

Japan has the world's keenest taste for whale meat, with a whole minke whale on the dockside worth between £20,000 and £25,000. Under the guise of "scientific whaling" the Japanese have continued to hunt, killing several hundred animais each year whose meat ends up in restaurants, and more important for them, keeping their whaling fleet

Ian Stewart, the New Zealand commissioner, said hunting under the revised management procedure would allow 100,000 minkes to be taken out of the south-ern Atlantic stock.

If the IWC remains a body organising whaling and not. as the Icelanders and Norwegians believe, a body preventing it, it seems logical, if not politicaly inevitable, that may restart. The French proposal of an Antarctic sanctuary is an extra insurance policy against the resumption of whaling because it would severely restrict the area in which the Japanese were able

Mr Gummer said that, even if the revised management procedure were adopted. Britain would still vote against the resumption of commercial whaling on three grounds: uncertainty of the state of whale stocks, difficulty of enforcing the proce-dures, and the lack of an assuredly humane method of killing.

"We will not even consider the lifting of the moratorium in circumstances where these three major issues are all of them unresolved," he said.

Smallest species faces biggest risk

By OUR ENVIRONMENT CORRESPONDENT

MINKE whales, found off the coast of Britain as well as in the waters of the proposed Antarctic sanctuary, are in the firing line simply because as the smallest of the great whale species they have been least hunted and therefore remain most numerous.

The other great whales have been savagely depleted. with whalers hunting the largest animals first, and moving to smaller prey as each species started to disappear. The process began with the blue whale, at up to 90ft long the largest animal on Earth. Tens of thousands were slaughtered each year between the wars, in a hunt in which Britain played a prominent role. Scientists believe that the blue whale population in the southern oceans, at fewer than one thousand individuals, is less than 1 per cent of the original; although protected for 25 years, it remains one of the most endangered animals on earth. When blue whales started to disappear, the whalers moved on to the next animal down in size, the fin whale; that too suffered a population crash, and its remaining numbers are now thought to be about 5 per cent of the original stock The same thing happeend with the next one down, the humpback, and then the next, the sei whale, while the sperm whale suffered a similar fate.

The minke is the last great whale whose stocks are relatively untouched. There are between 30,000 and 80,000 animals in the North Atlantic, as well as the 750,000 thought to inhabit the south-

Protesters give the Japanese food for thought

BY KERRY GILL

A HUGE inflatable model of what is possibly the world's best loved "charismatic mega-fauna", to use United Nations-speak, was floated across George Square in Glasgowyessers you have in Glasgow yesterday on the eve of the International Whaling Commission's week-long

Nearly 1,000 people, most-ly young, gathered to tell Ja-pan, Norway and Iceland of their disgust for moves to re-introduce commercial whaling. The message was especially for those Japanese who happily spend more than £70 on a pound of whale meat in the restaurants of Tokyo. It was not the time to be Japa-nese and on holiday in

With the distant drums of an Orange march beating in the background, celebrities from politics and show business clambered onto a stage to express their oneness with whales. Tony Banks, Labour MP for Newham North West, said that whales brains were larger in propor tion to their massive bodies than those of politicians. He received the first cheer of the day.

Men, not women, he said, had created the world's worst disasters, for example the present slaughter in Bosnia-Herzegovina. But, of all the world's problems the plight of the whales was one of the most significant. In spite of a world moratorium on whaling, thousands of whales ended up on Japanese plates. Mr Banks said that instead of eating whales the Japanese might try cating each

His more practical sugges tion was for a trade sanction against Japan until it stopped. He said that Norway and Iceland should be banned from entering the European Community until they adjusted their whaling policies.

Jon Magnusson, a member of the Icleandic delegation. stood silently as his country was denigrated for its call for commercial whaling to be allowed. Having listened at the door of an earlier press conference held by the Environmental investigation Agency, he said: "It is all stage a walk-out from the They announced their intention of doing so last year because the commission's rules state that a spontaneous demonstration of this nature must be indicated a year in advance. Hundreds of anti-whaling people, representing many environmental groups, have descended on Glasgow to bring pressure on the commission not to concede to the pariah nations. Many, including some Japanese, have travelled the world to stop a return to commercial fishing of minke whales.

An American tourist who stumbled into the crowds asked if it would get violent. These things always do back home in Berkley, California, where I come from," he said. But it did not. The few Japa-nese whale-lovers, looking a bit sheepish as their country was excoriated, wore Save the Whale T-shirts.

Alan Thornton, chairman of the Environmental Investigation Agency, attacked Japan for receiving pirated ivory as well as whale meat. The elephant is another animal termed by the UN as a "charismatic mega-fauna".

CONFERENCE AGENDA

THE main points on the agenda of the week-long IWC meeting are:

I is the revised management procedure (RMP) for what is the treatment of the second in the whale hunting ready, or is further work needed on it?

If the RMP is ready, is it to be adopted by the 37country conference?

If it is adopted, is a quota to be set under it for killing whales by the pro-whaling nations (meaning an end to the 1986 moratorium on commercial whiles)?

☐ Are the waters around the Antarctic below 40 degrees south to be declared a whale sanctuary, as the French propose?

sanctuary to be renewed?

Will the whaling nations,
Japan, Norway and iceland, announce more "scientific" whaling programmes for next year?

Other issues likely to arise include killing methods, and questions about and porpolses - where the IWC's competence is arguable.

Slow birth cycle hinders recovery

WHALES give birth to a sin-gle calf, and their reproduction rate is slow, so populations drastically reduced in a few years by high-technol-ogy hunting could take decades to recover. Without protection, they may not re-cover at all (Michael McCarthy writes). The danger is compounded by the fact that it is difficult to count whales in the ocean and the population can easily be over-estimated. Counting is done by survey ships. A statistical estimate of a total population in a given area is projected from the number of animals actually seen.

A whale stock and its reproduction rate are then subject to 100 years of computer-simulated hunting. The pro-cedure was adopted in principle at the IWC's meeting last year, but it is still being refined. It has a safety level of 54 per cent of a given initial stock; if numbers were reduced below this level. hunting would cease and whales would be protected. It aims at a maximum sustainable yield of 72 per cent of the stock. That means that a quarter of the initial number of animals could be taken off and the stock could still, in theory, sustain itself.

But, as New Zealand pointed out in Reykjavik last year. this means that 100,000 of the 400,000 estimated adult, huntable minkes in the south Atlantic could be killed. Whether this is a "sustainable" number or not, in political terms it would be unacceptable for much of the

Britain believes that this system may be impossible to police effectively and that killing methods are still too inhumane to be permitted.

Families discover paths to freedom

BY TIM JONES

CITY centres were a good proposition for fleeing the madding crowd yesterday as the countryside from Hadrian's Wall to the Lizard was being tramped by thousands of ramblers taking part in a nationwide family day.

This was no great confron-tation of the "Forbidden Britain" variety, where members of the Ramblers' Association clash with owners of grouse moors or farmers who have ploughed up paths for potatoes. Rather, it was designed partly to introduce children to maps, compasses and the delights of the countryside.

countryside. Catharine Cunningham. the association's assistant director, said: "With the recession now affecting so many people, family ram-bling day is more important than ever this year. It introduces families to a most en-joyable new pastime which is really cheap and open to every age group. It is fun and it is free." At Aylesbury in Buckinghamshire, brown owl Joan James and her brownie pack were joined by Sir John Johnson, chairman of the Countryside Commission, which has set itself the task of clearing 120,000 miles of footpaths by the end of the decade. For Sir John, former British High Commissioner to Kenya, who lists his recreations in Who's Who as "climbing and reaching remote places" the three-mile stroll through well ordered fields did not present the ultimate challenge.

The brownies, however, were excited by the great adventure and were backpack-ing enough crisps and pop to keep a small army going. Mind you, they had an ulteri-or motive: they were after their walking badges.

The other 51 per cent is owned by a consortium of German banks. The airline was renamed Deutsche BA and given a new colour scheme using the colours of the German flag.

The first flights are between Berlin and Munich and Stuttgart. The new company will be managed and crewed by Germans and will initially concentrate on internal services although there are plans to expand services to include international destinations.

◀ Whatever you can cram into your life chances are the Volvo estate can help you do it.

Mountaineer, Chris Bonington, for example, travels far and wide in his Volvo estate.

"It thinks nothing of carting all my climbing gear down to the Alps. I also drive 40,000 miles a year on lecture tours and seminars."

As many people with adventurous hobbies (or even professions) have discovered, the Volvo is a better choice than off-road vehicles.

On long journeys the offroaders can become wearisome. Noise levels are greater and characteristically the steering demands constant attention to stop the car wandering.

The Volvo carries more and you actually enjoy the drive.

"I must say I loved the way the car performed. (940 SE Turbo estate.) On our legally restricted highways I never got close to verifying the 124 mph top speed but can confirm that at the legal 70 mph limit, the engine is turning at under 3,000 rpm and the turbo is idling." Sunday Express.

he Volvo estate isn't the kind of car you have to enthusiastic road report stated "on motorways the Volvo rode like a limousine."

Inside the analogy holds good, too. On the 960 24 valve, for example, electric seats, electronic climate control and leather are all standard.

Don't be scared by the size either. The Volvo estate has a turning circle of just 32 ft. (smaller than that of a Volkswagen Golf), and if you want to fill all that space with Mahler rather than luggage, a tailor-made stereo radio cassette comes as standard.

There's a whole world out there beyond the garden centre and school gates and to take you there than a Volvo estate.

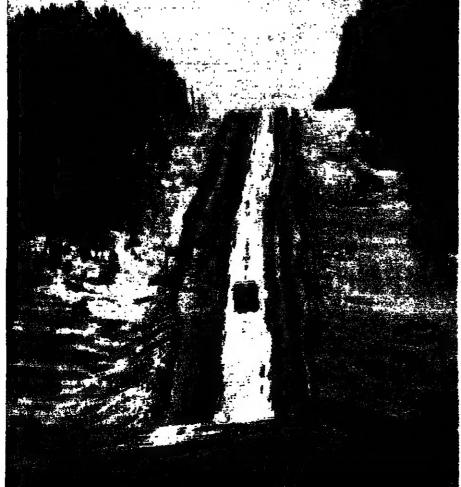

It has more luggage capacity than the Citrosu, Audi, Mercedes or Granada estates, and if it swallows suitcases, it also eats up miles.

The 940 2.3 litre turbo estate, for example, delivers 190 bhp, giving it a safer over-taking time (50-70mph) than a Jaguar XJS or BMW 535i.

One other touring advantage of the Volvo estate becomes immediately apparent—the views.

Slim door pillars and panoramic windows give the Volvo all-round visibility.

◀ If life is precious doesn't it make sense to drive a car. that's designed to preserve it? No car maker has a better reputation for safety than Volvo.

We have recently added to that reputation with a unique and patented development called SIPS (Side Impact Protection System).

In effect, it creates shock absorbers for the side of the car. The impact of a side collision is absorbed through a large part of the car body. Floor and roof members, doors and door sills all play an active part in absorbing the blow. (Better them than you.)

Of course, there's more to safety than the ability to survive trouble.

◀ Into every life a little rain must fall. (Not to mention snow, sleet and hail.)

The Volvo estate is tested in temperatures that range from -40C to +40C and it's designed to cope with both extremes. (That's why you'll find busy Volvo dealers in both Alaska and Australia.)

Our aim is to produce a car that behaves predictably whatever the driving conditions.

ABS brakes, for instance, are standard on all 940 models, while the 960 automatic also has a 'winter mode' that modifies the gear changes for snow and ice.

Not surprisingly, the latest report on Injury, Accident & Casualty Rates* prompted The Guardian to highlight the Volvo as the "best pick of the large cars."

Sex offenders 'free to view pornography in prisons'

Clarke: offenders sent to specialist jails

A WIDE range of pornography, including material showing acts of violence against women and children, is available in prisons, according to a report published today.

In one prison, it says, inmates had obtained a magazine which included pictures of a woman being raped while workers at another jail complained to the governor about the contents of video films being shown to segre-gated sex offenders. One film depicted a woman being abused and asking for more violence.

Malcolm Cowburn, author of the report on pornography in pris-ons in England and Wales, said: The presence of all kinds of pornography within the institutions is accepted as inevitable." He added that although the prison department had powers to control the amount of pornography, whether the authorities wished to do so was not clear. Mr Cowburn's report is one of

"It is alarming that prisoners including those convicted of sexual offences can see magazines portraying women in a degrading light. The whole prison system tends to reinforce macho attitudes towards women and children and the availability of pornography makes it worse," he said.

The death, which resulted in a verdict of "lack of care" from an inquest, led to an investigation by a working group within the prison department. Angela Rumbold then Home Office minister, considered the findings so important that she placed them in the Commons library.

Brain tumour drug earns British team $1.5m deal

By NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

THE Cancer Research Campaign has struck a deal with an American drug company to develop and market a new compound that has shown exciting potential in treating brain tumours.

The drug, Temozolomide, was discovered by Malcolm Stevens at Aston University. The Schering-Plough company has made an initial payment of $1.5 million (£800,000) to the Cancer Research Campaign for rights to the drug, and if it proves a big success it could earn the campaign up to £20 million a year once in full production.

Gordon McVie, scientific director of the campaign, says that the results so far have been astonishing. "Two patients who came into hospital on stretchers got up and walked after taking the drug. In other cases, we have seen enormous shrinkage of the tumours, and in brain tumours where we haven't had any effective drugs before that is extraordinary.

THE Rev Kathleen Richardson, the first woman presi-dent of the Methodist Con-ference, which meets this week in Newcastle upon Tyne, is one sign of the changes in the movement

The conference will today debate a report that says there are no theological objections to calling God "Mother" and many good reasons for doing so. The report cites prayers where God is described as giving birth and Jesus as a mother hen.

Later this week, the conference will decide whether to allow minor gambling such as raffles in church halls, and whether to allow a licensed bar at Southlands College, southwest London, a Methodist-owned foundation.

Charles Wesley, one of the founders of Methodism, remains a celebrated hymn writer, and his works are sung in churches of many denominations. The conference this week is expected to set up a review of its music and hymns.

Traditionalists can take heart from a report on family life, which unequivocally restates the traditional Christian approach to marriage. They will also be relieved to learn that the faith and order committee has decided that universalism — which holds that all people will inevitably be saved by God's love - is not Methodist doctrine.

In her inaugural address. Mrs Richardson said: "Too often our understanding of religious life has been formed by images of renunciation of sex, money, power — and by preaching self-denial. We have had enough of the cling to the rock and bleed' spirituality, of the 'if it hurts it must be doing me good' understanding of church life." She called instead for the denial of the attention-seeking ego and of self-importance.

high quality, he says. Headhunted from Hollywood two years ago, where he was a film executive, Mr Faxon says he is used to seeing markets change. But the dramatic collapse of the Impressionist market within months of him being offered a job at Sotheby's was something new to him. Having spent ten months at the company's New York office, he came to London ten months ago and was promoted to his present job three weeks ago.

The move placed him above the previous managing director, Tim Llewellyn, and sent waves of apprehension around an already demoralised staff. Many believed they had already been working to capacity during the

Other offerings tomorrow will include Monet's Les Alpes vues du Cap d'Antibes, estimated at £600.000 to £800,000 and from a private Swiss collection; a slight oil painting of a girl by Renoir at £400,000 to £500,000 and Picasso's Sylvette, a portrait made from a cut-out sheet of metal, at £650,000.

When the Picasso last ap-peared at auction in 1984, it fetched £132,000, so next week's sale should entail a substantial profit for its owner. But on the whole, the estimates compare pathetically with the prices of three years ago at the sale of Impressionist paintings from the British Rail Pension Fund's collection when Renoir's La Promenade sold for £10.3 million and a Blue Period Picasso £3.9 million. One question is whether Impressionism will make a comeback, or whether it is permanently relegated to the status of yesterday's news.

UN to give | Malawians Somalis tent refuge

By MICHAEL THEODOULOU

AS THE first relief aid reached 4,000 starving Somali boat refugees on the scorching beaches of the Yemen at the weekend, a United Nations official was hopeful a tragedy would be averted.

Comparing their plight to that of the Vietnamese boat people in the 1970s, he gave a warning of a disaster if the international community does not tackle the root of the problem in Somalia. The situation has improved since Friday and there have been no deaths in the past two days, Pamel Morgene, of the UN High Commission for Refu-gees responsible for the Mid-dle East and North Africa. said. "The Yemeni authoriwe are looking for ways with them to set up a permanent camp," Mr Morgene said.

Thousands of tents which once sheltered Kurdish refugees from the cold in northem Iraq were on their way to protect the Somali refugees from the sun. Four thousand refugees, who fled civil war and famine in their homeland, are packed into a makeshift camp on the beach near Aden, where temperatures in the shade soar to 50°C. Sixty people died from hunger on board the first refugee ship. Another 90 desperate refugees died after jumping from the freighter to swim the 400

'forced to vote'

FROM REUTER IN HARARE

MALAWI'S leading opposi-tion group said yesterday that government supporters had been forcing people to vote in the parliamentary election at the weekend, undermining a boycott that it organised in opposition to years of one-party rule.

"We understand there is gross intimidation ... people are being forced to vote," said a Harare-based official of the Interim Committee for a Democratic Alliance on Saturday. Malawi's state-run radio reported late on Friday that long queues of people had "fought their way" to cast their votes, adding that some were unable to vote for reagestion at polling stations.

four private game parks elsewhere in South Africa where rich American tour-ists will be charged up to $50,000 (£27,800) for the privilege of hunting one and killing it. They will take the head for a wall trophy, and no doubt the feet for wastepaper baskets and the tail for a fancy whip. The rest will be left to rot.

But the shooting of these animals from an endan-gered species is a measure of how far their conservation has gone and empha-sises the role that can be played in conservation by hunters. "The hunting fra-ternity is a large body." Mark Cooke, the chief con-servator at Hluhluwe, said. It makes it viable for private landowners to go into game reserves."

There is also an irony that the rhinoceros herds are now in more imminent danger than ever from Poachers for their valuable horn. Ten white rhinos have been killed in the Na-tal parks in the past 18 months. One was killed this year and, thanks to energetic police action, the killers and the man who was in possession of the horn have been arrested

The Natal rhinos are in pretty good shape. There are 1,600 white rhinos in the Umfolozi/Hluhluwe complex of parks, and the rarer black rhino now numbers 300 and is rising. Since the start of conservation here, the rhino has been such a success story that 35 white rhinos were put up for auction at the game sale — not for trophy purposes, but for breeding. They fetched much lower prices this year than on pre-vious occasions, demonstrating the success that Natal has had in redistributing its stocks. While the breeding rhinos fetched about 26,500 rand (£5,300) each, the excess males were withdrawn from the auc-tion when the bidding failed to reach 30,000 rand.

Elsewhere, things are not going so well. In Swaziland, where rhinos are being dehorned as in South Africa in an attempt to protect them from poachers, rhinos are now down to a total of a

How Mrs America thrives on a fling

ROSS Perot's advisers have been trying to work out why women are less convinced by his charms than men. The answer, if you believe a new book called the Erotle Silence of the American Wife, may be his outspoken opposition to adultery. Last month, the Texan presidential hopeful said that he would not knowingly hire anyone who had been unfaithful to their spouse. But according to Daima Heyn, editor-in-chief of Family Health Magazine and author of the new work on unfaithful women, for many American wives there is nothing better than a little adultery. Ms Heyn has appeared on almost every talk show in America with her controversial book, which is shooting up the best-seller list faster than

After talking with hundreds of married women ranging in age from 20 to 70, Ms Heyn reveals that extramarital exthrough citement her interviewees discovered their genuine

While almost every woman complained about her husband, most chose to remain married while com-mitting adultery. For many, the thrill of the fling added the necessary spice to keep tired relationships on

The other conclusion to be drawn from the book is that the American wife is not so much silent about her erotic life, as extremely talkative - with one interesting exception. The only woman in 304 pages of titillating details who does not reveal adulterous inclinations is the author.

Do-little summit keeps cash and treaty top of agenda

JOHN Major lost three important fights at the ECs Lisbon summit at the weekend, demonstrating more clearly than any of the summitteers intended that the political infighting over Europe in Britain this autumn will be complicated by money and Maastricht.

Although the painful subject of the Danish rejection of the EC's new treaty was mentioned as little as possible, Saturday's testy summit ex-changes over the Community budget revealed thinly veiled tensions over how the EC should cope with the credibility gap which has opened between governments and voters. The summit settled almost nothing. bundled a bunch of probiems into the lap of the UK presidency which starts on Wednesday, and left a bad taste in everyone's mouth.

Over Yugoslavia, Mr Major failed to hinder a neatly choreographed attempt by President Mitterrand of France to seize the pub. relations initiative in Sarajevo. Of several setbacks, this was the least important. The government is confident of its scepticism over the military support for a humanitarian mission and enjoys covert support from other states nervous that a EC unequipped and underprepared to act as a policeman may flounder. The summit's dominant figures, Mr Major, M Mitterrand, Helmut Kohl of Germany and Jacques Delors, had agreed in advance that the quarrel over the EC budget would not be allowed to get out of hand. Even that modest target almost came unstuck as Felipe González of Spain accused Mr Major and Herr Kohl of trying to renege on the commitments they made at Maastricht to boost the subBRITISH PRESIDENCY before any settlement. Mr Major cut any reference to doubling money for the EC's poorest regions out of the statement, but most diplomats would draw the condusion expressed in the private note which the Commission sends to its offices as soon as a summit finishes.

Although no decisions were taken, it says, "it is likely that the agricultural guideline will be continued and that there will be a doubling by 1997 of the financial effort ... in the four these predictions say that UK positions on farm spending and regional subsidy face defear.

The most serious, and least visible, of Mr Major's reverses occurred over the formulas adopted on beginning talks with Scandinavian and alpine states which want to join the EC. Formal talks cannot start until Maastricht is ratified. So the majority of states who remain M Mitterrand, Herr Kohl ewarm about taking in Austria. Sweden. Finland and Switzerland managed to remove any timetabling from their announcement on Saturday. Britain wants to also hope that the spectacle of others queueing to join the EC will help to concentrate Danish minds and bring them back on board the Maastricht train. Lisbon showed the other EC states little inclined to help Britain to woo its Euro-sceptics. The "new realism" supposed to have been engendered by the Danish referendum is not all that apparent yet.

and M Delors cannot really make up their minds how to deal with Mr Major, who comes to each European summit with an inconvenient list of requests. In Maastricht, bargaining on the small print of a draft treaty six months ago, he won the points which mat-tered. In Lisbon, fighting on the more traditional ground of drafting wordy formulas about the EC's direction, he lost. Assuming that the early autumn backs the treaty, the next stage of EC political and economic union turns on the Commons. If Britain does not ratify, the treaty would be impossible to rescue without a full-scale negotiation between countries which wanted to start again. If MPs do pass the bill, a series of options will be considered for sorting out Denmark.

The one success that Mr Major can claim from Lisbon in terms of his own party problems was on subsidiarity, the doctrine that less should be done by the EC institutions and more by national governments or bodies even closer to the people. The other EC states have agreed that all present EC legislation has to be examined to see that it meets subsidiarity criteria, although not until the end of next year. In the interests of enticing back the Danes and pacifying his own back benches. Mr Major is calling for the Commission to scrap outmoded directives and to justify anything it plans to do in future against subsidiarity criteria. He wants, and M Delors seems on the point of conceding, a "subsidiarity filter" to stop the Commission taking on tasks in future that are better done by member states or at still lower levels.

Thatcher pledges to vote against Major

BY SHEILA GUNN, POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

MARGARET Thatcher yes-terday made it clear she would vote against the Maastricht treaty in the Lords in contradiction to John Major's insistence that Britain is honour bound to ratify the deal. Maastricht is a treaty too far, she said, and would lead to a massive transfer of power to the European Commission.

As she prepares to return to parliament tomorrow as Baroness Thatcher of Kesteven. the former prime minister gave ministers a taste of her potential to cause trouble from the Conservative benches in the Lords by disagreeing with Mr Major on virtually every aspect of European

She is expected to reiterate her views in the Lords debate on Thursday on the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC, ignoring the standing order that maiden speeches should be unprovocative.

During an interview on TVam's Frost on Sunday Lady Thatcher repeated her demand for a referendum on Maastricht and, unlike her successor, interpreted the treaty as a centralising rather than decentralising measure.

She disputed the reappointment of Jacques Delors as EC president for a further two years, backed by Mr Major, as wrong and described subsidiarity, the principle seized on by Mr Major for returning powers from Brussels to nation states, as gobbledlegook.

The former prime minister singled out for praise the Danes for saving parliamentary democracy by voting against ratifying the deal reached last December. Asked if she would vote against the ratification bill in the Lords she replied: "Most certainly. I didn't vote for the treaty of Maastricht.

" Maastricht is a treaty too far. I most earnestly hope it will not be ratified. It takes so many powers from ours, the oldest parliament, the mother of parliaments in the world, which has been the example and inspiration to others."

Questioned on TV-am's Frost on Sunday about his future after stepping down as Labour leader next month, Mr Kinnock appeared satisfied with the prospect of returning at the age of 50 to the backbenches and a seat on the party's ruling executive.

However, he did not dis-miss the idea of replacing Bruce Millan as one of Britain's two EC commissioners. Nor did he reject taking the post of foreign secretary, in a Labour government under Government sources have made clear that John Major would be prepared to put forward Mr Kinnock's name if nominated by the new leader of the Labour party. In the television interview

Mr Kinnock said he was going to be around for a long time. "There are certain causes that I want to promote and they include causes that can be described as EC causes. So I'm not going to sit here at 50 years of age and say never in the whole of the future would I even contemplate it (the post of EC commissioner). But it's not even a realistic idea now."

He also left the way open for Labour to change its mind about opposing a referendum on the Maastricht treaty. If the constitutional problems over the future roles of the British parliament and the EC were to continue for a long time, he indicated that it might be necessary to seek the Hopes for a united Europe rose again as its intertwined economies boomed. M Delors' fame on the Continent was clinched by Margaret Thatcher's enmity: being targeted by the Iron Lady turned him into a hero from Mannheim to Madrid.

But the image belongs to a vanished past. Britons now ask whether M Delors is really the contrite civil servant of the weekend's Lisbon summit. Other Europeans ask whether he has not made a perfect justice that he is no late convert to the idea of subsidiarity, the assertion developed from Roman Catholic social doctrine that power should be held at the most local possible level. He first began talking about the idea in 1988, when the powerful German regional governments started fretting about the threat that Brussels posed to their prerogatives. M Delors' dissections of subsidiarity are by no means the end of the British government's problems with this elusive idea. He remarked privately last week that no sooner had he launched his thoughts on subsidiarity inside the 17-member Commis-sion that he began hearing 16 different versions of what the word means. M Delors has recently diluted the federalism that he preached in earlier years: he lays heavier emphasis now on the staying power of nation states. He sees the issue of balancing power inside the EC as one of regulating the internal mechanism of a monolithic system. He is a decentraliser, but he assumes that devolution of less important powers is in the gift of a single, powerful centre. The Community's decisions should affect the issues that can make Europe a political and economic superpower.

In a revealing phrase in their report on enlarging the EC, the commissioners acknowledged that the EC was too often bogged down in secondary matters and gave "no leadership on questions of vital importance". M Delors stays as determined as ever to have money and mili-tary force decided by the

Beach patrols issue sun, sea and sewage warning

Millions of tourists who travel to Italy this summer in search of sun, sea and sand may find themselves wallowing in sewage, scientists from an environmental watchdog body said yesterday. The Lega Ambiente (Environment League) sounded the alarm over the parlous state of the Italian seaside after the scientists began collecting samples of seawater in two survey ships known as green schooners. All ten areas surveyed in Campagnia, from the southernmost tip of the Bay of Naples northwards, proved worthy of "black flags" to discourage bathers, the re-port said. Analysis of seawater taken from off the shores of Naples showed a pollution level 150 times higher than the limit recommended by Italian law, according to the report.

Serb leader warns West of Vietnam quagmire

FROM TIM JUDAH AND DESSA TREVISAN IN BELGRADE

RADOVAN Karadzic, the Bosnian Serb leader, has never minced his words. He said at the weekend: "If there is armed intervention over Sarajevo, Bosnia will turn into a new Vietnam. This is not an shall fight to the death." But even as he spoke his men were withdrawing artillery and tanks from around the besieged city's airport.

With Croat forces rampaging across Bosnia, Serb forces in retreat and Serbia on the international rack, to light the world to keep an airport would be a foolhardy gesture at best. Taking the threat of military intervention extremely seriously, the demoralised Bosnian Serb forces are now turning to saving what they can.

Bosnian Croat forces, backed by Croatia, are moving in a pincer movement to cut the republic in two. They are also thrusting across the frontier near Dubrovnik to wreak their revenge on Trebinje, where Serb troops besieging the Adriatic ports have their headquarters.

Ar the weekend Boutros Bourros Ghali, the United Nations secretary-general, praised Serb forces for withdrawing from around Sarajevo airport but criticised Bosnian territorials for ceasefire breaches. Diplomats in Belgrade say that the fear is that Croatia has been egging the Bosnians on to provoke the Serbs precisely in order to trigger a full-scale military intervention.

If this happens, then Zagreb would seize the opportunity to drive Serbs from the UN-protected enclaves in Croatia and a dramatic and bloody new cycle of ven-geance and "ethnic cleansing" would begin. In Belgrade, official Serbia has been curiously quiet about the impending threat of intervention. President Milosevic insists that he is appalled by the shelling of Sarajevo, that Serbia has no territorial designs on Bosnia. and that his country is the media conspiracy". But the war that Mr Milosevic and his allies began a year ago has now run utterly out of control. All the best-laid Serbian plans are on the brink of disaster. Greater Croatia may yet arise from the ashes of greater Serbia.

Radovan Karadzic is now shunned by Mr Milosevic, at least publicly, but fuel supplies are still reaching the Bosnian Serbs. Serbia is also collaboration. collaborating in "ethnic cleansing" in eastern Bosnia For several days, a thousand Bosnian Muslims have sat in trains in the northern Serbian town of Subotica after being cleared by force from a town in eastern Bosnia.

By contrast, the country is rapidly waking up to the fact that fresh trainloads of Serbian refugees will soon be coming from Croatia and Bosnia. It is also clear that, having bequeathed the Bosnian Serbs vast amounts of weaponry from the former federal army, they are now no longer at the beck and call of the Serbian president. Faced with military defeat, they will continue to fight rather than lay down their arms to save lay down their arms we sanc-Mr Milosevic or to have sanctions lifted from Serbia.

Even the immediate departure of Mr Milosevic would no longer be enough for Serbs to extricate themselves successfully from the present predicament. A new Serbo-Croat war cannot be excluded.

War in the south in Kosovo is also on the agenda. Having brutally repressed the autonomy previously granted to the two million Albanians who live in the province, no peaceful accommodation with Serbia is possible; but not even the most liberal Serbian opposition politicians can contemplate conceding Kosovo's independence or union with

Bush weighs advantages of using military in Sarajevo

FROM MARTIN FLETCHER IN WASHINGTON

PRESIDENT Bush, facing an agonising election year decision on whether to com-mit United States forces to the relief of Sarajevo, conferred urgently with other world leaders on Balkan developments over the weekend.

Following the EC's endorsement on Saturday of military force and with the UN's 48-hour deadline for an end to the fighting due to expire last night, Mr Bush took time, on his daughter's wedding day, to telephone leaders including John Ma-jor, President Yeltsin of Russia and Brian Mulroney, the Canadian prime minister. The unpopular president knows that a swift, decisive operation could secure his remessy, protracted involvement would only deepen his vulnerability. There is minimal enthusiasm in Washington for using force but most diplomatic options have been exhausted.

The United States has reportedly refused a German request that it send the Sixth Fleet from Sicily to the Balkan coast. Officials say that if the Americans did participate in a United Nations operation it would be in an air role at most and would insist that European nations provide the ground troops. The president's top advisers remain split on the issue of military intervention. ### Crown Prince joins protest

By Tim Judah and Dessa Trevisan

BLOWING kisses to the crowds, Crown Prince Alexander yelled at the top of his voice: "I am with you." The pretender to the throne of Serbia returned to his country on Saturday and yesterday addressed more than 60,000 people at an opposition rally in central Belgrade. Alexander Karadjordjevic, hitherto a British businessman, has returned to Serbia as the opposition marshals its forces in a last-ditch effort to secure President Milosevic's resignation. But officials at yesterday's rally admitted disappointment at the turnout.

Crown Prince Alexander who, because of international sanctions, was forced to return via Timisoara in Romania, visited striking Belgrade day night and urged them to keep up their protest against Mr Milosevic "until the end". The students gave him a rapturous welcome, chanting in unison: "We want the king!" The rally, which was held on Vidovdan, the day on which Serbs commemorate their defeat at the hands of the Ottoman Turks in 1389, was blessed by the country's Orthodox patriarch. The church, a traditional ally of government in Serbia, has made its opposition to Mr Milosevic's government ex-plicit over the past two months, and yesterday the patriarch appealed for Serbs to resolve their differences without resort to civil war. The demonstration was organised by a new coalition, the Democratic Movement for Serbia, but the most important speaker was Vuk Draskovic, leader of the main opposition party. He called on the army and police to "join the Serbian people" and appealed to Mr Milosevic to go, saying that, if he did not, "Serbia will be a corpse; people will pick at us".

speaker to tackle the thorny question of war guilt, also told the crowd that Serbia needed to seek repentance for its acts. He spoke of the people of Sarajevo "eating grass and nettles", and predicted that unless Mr Milosevic resigned this would be Serbia's fate too. Mr Draskovic said that President Milosevic claimed that the cause of our downfall is that we are Serbs. He has a therapy — stay in the abyss, starve, or die heroically in the struggle against the whole world".

Mr Draskovic said that a resolution of the present troubles could be found only if all Serbia's political movements thrashed out the foundations of a transitional coalition government through round-table

While the opposition to Mr Milosevic becomes steadily stronger, the turnout at yesterday's rally seems to indicate that their moment has not come yet. Nevertheless many demonstrators last night declared their intention to camp in central Belgrade until the president goes. Sava Kostadinov, a protester from the provincial city of Nis. said: "We shall get rid of this communist scum. The one who tries to stop the wheel of civilisation will fall under it and be crushed."

Sop to Greece: European Community leaders, in a concession to Greece, said on Saturday that they are ready to recognise the republic of Macedonia, but only if it does not call itself by that name. The decision was aimed at ending months of deadlock during which Greece vetoed EC recognition of the former Yugoslav republic if it called itself Macedonia.

Athens accuses the government in Skopje, which declared itself independent in March, of trying to usurp the northern Greek region of Macedonia. (AP)

TV coverage draws flak

FROM BRUCE CLARK IN MOSCOW

MOSCOW television, already seen by many former Soviet republics as a purveyor of mischievous disinformation, was the object of further controversy yesterday after it appeared to have exaggerated wildly the scale of a skirmish between armed factions in Muslim Tajikistan.

The main news bulletin of the television channel of the Commonwealth of Independent States, which is watched across 11 time zones, suggest-ed that 100 people had been killed in clashes at three villages near the Afghan border. in a report that could have stirred passions in other Muslim regions of the former Soviet Union, it said there were women and children among the dead and that many of the corpses were unidentifiable.

Yesterday, it emerged that the encounter between supporters of President Nabiyev. Tajikistan's communist leader, and residents of the remote Kurgan-Tyube region than commonwealth television had suggested. An official of the Democratic party, part of the liberal-Muslim coalition that recently forced Mr Nabiyev to share power with his opponents, said about 15 people had been injured, one critically. He said local residents had successfully thwart-ed an attempt by pro-Nabiyev irregulars to seize control of the remote region.

Sherali Khairullayev, Tajikistan's deputy interior minister, said he had received reports of up to ten violent deaths in the region, but nothing had occurred on the scale described by the broadcast. "We protest strongly at the gratuitous stirring up of passions over the social and political situation in the republic by the Russian and commonwealth mass me-

Army chief issues plea to officers

FROM MARY DEJEVSKY IN MOSCOW

IN A document indicating a steep decline in the morale of the former Soviet armed forces, General Pavel Grachev, the Russian defence minister, has appealed to all Russian officers to stay at their posts and play their part in building the new army.

His appeal, published at the weekend in Krasnaya Zvezda, the army newspaper, assured officers that there was no question of "wholesale demobilisation". He said: "Demobilisation will be conducted stage by stage as the forces are reformed." He promised that ministers would solve the social problems facing officers and their families "as a matter of top priority". Demobilised officers and those withdrawn from Eastern Europe are facing an acute shortage of accommodation and employment.

FATHER Anatoli, a Moldavian Orthodox priest, crossed himself twice as he ran past the hulk of a burnt-out and bullet-ridden lorry. The priest has been busy this week. More than 300 people have been killed throughout Transdnesir as Russian rebels try to carve out a ministate from the former Soviet republic of Moldavia.

Elsewhere in Bendery, few people were venturing on to the streets. Those who had decided not to evacuate their families after a week of fight-ing were seeking refuge in

The Moldavians possess dozens of armoured personnel carriers and up to 25 tanks. Vyacheslav Kogut, the mayor of Bendery, says: We have enough for an effective defence."

Many of his men look frightened and all have itchy fingers on their triggers. Some, after a week's violence, have ceased to care for their personal safety. "This is a war in the name of the people. The Moldavian police are no better than Nazis," said Vya-cheslav Melnichuk, a slightly built bespectacled 32-yearold who looked as if he would be more at home with com-

Mr Melnichuk was heading to Tiraspol, separatists "capital", to sign up for a submachinegun and a uniform.
"After what has happened here in the past week, we have been forced to take to weapons to defend ourselves against Moldavia's police," he said.

The relationship between the 14th Russian army and the Moldavians has also worsened. Although there are no Russian officers manning the barricades in Bendery. they have taken up police duties in areas of Transdnestr to enable the Transdnestrians to field a larger number of men in clashes with the argaret Thatcher will not fade away into quiet retirement: not for her the anecdotes of the green-room that Harold Macmillan so savoured. Her eruption in an interview yesterday with David Frost was the start of a highly active period, including the launch today of her recording of Lincoln's Gettsyburg address, her introduction tomorrow into the House of Lords as Baroness Thatcher of Kesteven, and, shortly afterwards, her maiden speech. But can her thunder and lightning inflict any real damage on John Major and his government?

Discipline in the army is being strained by the war. Many of the officers were brought up in the region and local loyalties have now usurped their willingness to obey command from Moscow to stay neutral.

Her disagreements with her successor cover not only the Maastricht treaty and the reappointment of Jacques Delors but also interest-rate policy and public spending. Her declaration yes-terday that "I chose John. I worked for him and I made the right choice" had a hollow ring. So strong were her criticisms that I wondered whether she would even be taking the Conservative whip in the Lords. Sometimes the tolerance of even their lordships is stretched too far, as it was a few years ago when, in an exchange of letters worthy of P.G. Wodehouse, Bertie Denham, then chief whip, sug-gested to Lord Alport, a persisent critic of government policy, that he might be happier giving up the Tory whip. Her fire was concentrated, of course, on Europe. Maastricht was "a treaty too far" and she would "most certainly" vote against its ratification in the Lords. She may not get the opportunity since, by convention, the Lords does not vote against the second reading of bills that were commitments in the election manifesto of the party in power, as ratification of Maastricht was. The future Baroness Thatcher will soon learn the limitations of what she can do in the Upper House.

The Thatcher onslaught on Europe will continue to attract attention, both in the Lords and if she intervenes at the Tory party conference as Sir Edward Heath memorably did in 1981. She remains the biggest star among opponents of the treaty. But I doubt if her attacks will be decisive. The future of the Maastricht treaty rests largely on what happens in the French referendum and on whether the Danes can be brought back on board. But if other countries ratify, then so, eventually, will the Commons.

Mr Major will not have an easy time. Following the general discussion at the Lisbon summit about the desirability of "subsidiarity", he will have to offer a specific and legally enforceable definition of its meaning to satisfy his own MPs. Whenever the bill is revived, the committee stage will be the toughest test for the Tory whips since EC entry 20 years ago. But, in the end, if the preconditions of overseas support are satisfied, he will win. However, if the treaty fails because of defeat in the French referendum or because the difficulties of the Danes cannot be resolved. Mr Major will have shown that it is not Britain's fault. He did his best to honour commitments made at Maastricht; therefore Britain should have a central say in what happens next. By not risking an unnecessary confrontation now in the Commons, before the external conditions are right, he can also shift his position domestically if the treaty falters in the rest of Europe.

The future Baroness Thatcher may damage Mr Major more on the economy, though this is also she defended Britain's membership of the exchange-rate mechanism while simultaneously deploring the impact of the asso-ciated high interest rates on recovery prospects. Her complaint that policies that are 'Disraeli was right for Germany right about are causing increasing the House employment in Britain coincides of Lords; with murmurings again among Tory MPs that the green it is the shoots of recovery Elysian fields have failed to appear. publicly brush aside Baroness Thatcher's attacks, and in general it will be right to do so. Her views. and sympathisers, are over-repre-sented in the press. Whatever her allies in The Spectator and The Sunday Telegraph think and hope, there can be no restoration. Disraeli was right about the House of Lords; it is the Elysian fields for the politically dead. A speech may, from time to time, be noticed; a rebellion may be a nuisance to government managers: but it is peripheral to the main political debate. As Harold Macmilian found when he became Earl of Stockton, the novelty of criticisms by former prime ministers soon fades. So far there is no standard-bearer for her views of any significance in the Commons: with few exceptions, the main Thatcherites are happy to advance their careers under the Major banner. Baroness Thatcher should not delude herself. She has lost the ability to "make the weather" as Churchill said of Joseph Chamberlain. She no longer has a mandate: Mr Major has.

Mitterrand thrilled the French, but even they are asking questions, reports Charles Bremner

or cutting a spectacular dash, President Mitterrand could not have done better. France was sitting down to Sun-day lunch when the television news beamed in scenes that looked something between Apocalypse Now and a James Bond film. Two white helicopters thwap-thwapped their way in from Split to land at Sarajevo's rubble-strewn airport and out stepped the blue-suited figure of the French president.

Seconds before, General Lewis MacKenzie, commander of the United Nations force, had been seen shaking his head in amazement that anyone, let alone a head of state, would try anything as foolhardy as flying into the Bosni-an bloodbath. "He's a brave man," General MacKenzie muttered later as the 75-year-old president and Bernard Kouchner, his glamorous minister for humanitarian action, climbed into their armoured convoy. "Mission accomplished, the airport is reopened," Kouchner exclaimed

Other European leaders may have been flabbergasted by what looked yet another piece of French one-upmanship, but for M Mitterrand and many of his countrymen there was logic behind his Rambostyle drive through the shellbursts and sniper shots. It served, said

Tonton's finest hour

Roland Dumas, the foreign minister, as a "spectacular gesture of solidarity" with Bosnia that would serve to "break the circle of steel and fire and blood that grips 350,000 people".

M Dumas, clearly uneasy about the lack of Community consultation, noted that M Mitterrand had warned his partners at Lisbon that the time had come "to change rhythm and put an end to this scandal at the gate of the European Community". France was showing its support for a suffering people and brought credit to itself in the eyes of the world.

In M Mitterrand's calculations. his coup d'éclat diplomatique. as the headlines termed it, was a natural exercise of that special prestige on the world stage which France has largely lost with the collapse of communism, the rise of Germany and a series of bungled actions such as the engagement in Lebanon a decade ago. For France there was the additional bonus of upstaging the Americans, with their constant reproaches over European inaction.

A warrior renewed: Mitterrand, Resistance hero, rides again

Paris yesterday. M Mitterrand at least had scored some personal glory that can only bolster his sagging popularity. Even the most anti-Mitterrand hearts were warmed with the vision of old Tonton (Uncle) François proclaiming heroically from the battleground that there was really nothing to it. "Sleeping on the ground with something under my head, I've done it often. It keeps me young. In my position. I'm in deaver of certific coft." danger of gening soft."

ciated such heroic gestures, from Napoleon's visits to the front line.

Clemenceau's tours of the trenches and, perhaps most comparable with Sarajevo, General de Gaulle's daring march up the nave of Notre Dame in 1944 as German sniper bullets hit the floor around him. M Mitterrand himself had previously taken only a slightly lesser risk when he visited Beirut.

To make sure he reaped the full domestic benefit, the president took along with him reporters from Paris Match and the French news agency. "Good for old Tonton." went the line from some grudging admirers around a newspaper stand on the rue de Sevres. "At least he got out there and put his hide on the line while everyone else is just talking."

M Mitterrand's gesture has a particularly heavy bearing on his own political fortunes. He has virtually staked his presidency on a yes vote in a referendum on Maastricht expected in Septem-ber, and his opponents, notably Gaullists of the RPR, have been citing the impotence of the Community over Yugoslavia as proof of the folly of further integration. Domestic pressure for French action has been fuelled by visits to Sarajevo over the past month by public figures, most recently Jean-François Deniau, a leading oppo-sition politician.

However, in taking the initiative without any apparent mandate from his fellow leaders in Lisbon. M Mitterrand opened himself to attack for disrupting the very unity he went to Lisbon to preach. The centrist UDF group, which supports Maastricht, was quick to pounce yesterday, saying that however estimable his personal courage, the president had damaged the European cause. "Imagine what France would have said if Chancellor Kohl had undertaken such a trip," said Francois Bayron, the UDF's secretary-general.

M Mitterrand's people have been emphatic that his mission was purely humanitarian and not the precursor to any unilateral military action. Apart from the havoc this would play with the Community and the UN, there is no support among the French military. Just taking control of Sarajevo airport, said one French officer, would require a force of tens of thousands of commandos. With its valley setting, the Bosnian airport is all too reminiscent for older officers of the scene of France's last great military tragecreed that children studying the English language in our schools should not do so from the more idiotic television programmes (or even the less idiotic ones), but from the English classics, than a howl of anguish has gone up from the teachers of our unique and infinite tongue. For the nature of the howi. I turn to the education correspondent of The Sunday Times. Charles Hymas: "Classic works by Shakespeare and Dickens and the Bible have been branded as 'too difficult' by secondary schools taking part in the first of the government's new English ests. Comprehensives across the country are withdrawing pupils from the tests because they are not ready...the set texts, central to the back-to-Downing Street will no doubt basics drive ... are beyond the abilities of too many pupils ... the pilot tests for > ing in disarray . . ." The first thing we have to do is to sack, say, nine-tenths of the teachers of English in the country, without redundancy payments or pension. The second is to blow up the Department of Education with the entire staff in it. The third is to sit down and weep.

Shakespeare, Dickens and the Bible: these are singled out, it seems, to illustrate what a 14-yearold cannot understand. I pluck down, first, a volume of my beautiful Nonesuch Dickens; it is Nicholas Nickleby. Here is Dickens's incomprehensible description of Squeers:

He had but one eye, and the popular prejudice runs in favour of two. The eye he had was unquestionably useful, but decidedly not ornamen tal: being of a greenish grey, and in shape resembling the fan-light of a street door. The blank side of his face was much wrinkled and puckered up, which gave him a very sinister appearance, especially when he Bernard Levin asks how schools feed minds without literature smiled, at which times his expression bordered closely on the

I turn now to Shakespeare, also in the Nonesuch edition (the postwar one). In case 1 am accused of setting the sights too high, I take a passage of prose, and I have even goes hard) modernised the orthography. Here is the impenetrable Shakespeare, where Henry the Fifth is wooing Katharine:

Kate. the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes. but keeps his course truly. If thou will have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier, take a soldier, take a king.

For the third test, yet again with Nonesuch, I choose the unintelligible St John, after the Last

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so. I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you unto myself: that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go, ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto him. Lord we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him. I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. Now for some rage. I am a childless bachelor, but this crime perpetrated on the young transcends in its wickedness any distinction between those with children and those without. My school was by no means a forcinghouse, but by the time I was 14 I had not only read practically all of Shakespeare, but committed to memory something like 2,000 lines of his. I had certainly read at least half a dozen of Dickens. The Three Musketeers, Treasure Island, most of Kipling's poetry, Don Quivote, most of Chesterton and Belioc, Peacock, Karel Capek, Beerbohm, heaps of Shaw, Hazlitt and Cobbett, and - as anyone who has done me the honour of reading my book Enthusiasms will know - Moby-Dick.

But I do not give that catalogue to show how precociously clever I was: the whole point is (with the exception of the memorising - I had a freak memory), all my coevals could have said the same. and many could have said more. Who robbed this country's children of the understanding of books?

The excuses will come pouring in. Families have ceased to urge the love of reading; the children themselves have vastly more entertainments than we did, pre-eminently, of course, television. But we have missed the point. The terrible charge is not that children of 14 reject the reading and studying of substantial and serious books; it is that they haven't been taught to It must be obvious that children who have reached the age of 14 without also reaching the habit of real books and their meaning are very unlikely to get the habit later on: we are not only stealing from our child-ren one of the most precious and costly jewels we could give them, we are simultaneously breeding a race of illiterates. Look at my three excerpts. Now tell yourself that they would probably be rejected as a test of the English language, on the ground that they could not be understood by 14-year-olds. Moreover, the original intention in the testing process was not the use of Shakespeare. Dickens and the Bible: the list included The Ancient Mariner and Jane Eyre, though it seems they disappeared early on. presumably because if 14-year-olds jibbed at Dickens, it would take contestants of 28, or indeed 56, to unravel those mysteries.

We heard a good deal from the then minister of education before the election, and we have heard more from his replacement. Their theme is spelling and punctuation, and, indeed, grammar; but if 14year-olds do not understand Dickens. Shakespeare or the Bible, a fat lot of use it will be to tell 10-year olds the difference between dative.

accusative and genitive. I have said more than once, and not as a paradox or metaphor, that the English language is the greatest work of art the world has seen. But if it is, then what we are doing with it is the equivalent of ripping up a Leonardo, banning Beethoven and pulling down the Parthenon.

All the talk we ever have heard Uttered by bat or beast or bird -Hide or fin or scale or feather -Jabber it quickly and all together Excellent! Wonderful! Once again! Now we are talking just like men. Brother, thy tail hungs down behind!

Matthew Parris

ome years ago, Alan Coren wrote an essay about an incompetent blackbird. trying unsuccessfully to build a nest. It hadn't a clue. Coren was torn. Should he crawl along the branch to give the creature a hand, interfering with nature? We were never told what he decided.

Even at the time I knew how he felt. But on Saturday I felt it for myself. I had to make a similar decision about a tit. It was worse for my tit than for Coren's blackbird because his nestmaker faced only the humiliation of chatting up a bird, then having nowhere to invite her back for coffee. But to my fledgling tit. whether I intervened was life or death. I think it was a tit, but I am more confident of its address then of its tribe. It has been living with its parents, inside the thick stone wall of my barn, about ten feet up. There is a gap between the stones there which I have left unstopped because birds go in and out every spring. no doubt to nest. This year birds that resemble tits began bringing twigs in their beaks. More recently they have been bringing worms, as the cheeping within swells to a screech.

We are blessed with the patter of tiny claws. How many I do not know. With luck there are others. The thought that mine could have been an only fledgling weighed heavily with me. In a moment you will hear why.

But not before I ask whether you have wondered, as I have. Thatcher used to say. I never how it is that a bird ever learns to fly at all? Can there be any first attempt of such an all-ornothing kind? Once out of the nest and in freefall surely the baby bird must fly properly within seconds or die? If it tumbles to earth it is prey to every hawk, cat or fox around. its parents cannot (can they?) airlift it back to safety.

Have you ever parachuted? Do you know the horror as you sit on the edge of that roaring space and prepare to tumble? Our fear (which we know to be irrational) can be as nothing compared with that of the fledgling for whom everything de-pends upon the immediate exercise of a skill he doesn't even know he has. What must go through a young bird's mind, as his mother nudges him towards that brink which, ever since he hatched, has marked the limits of his world?

And yet they do fly. And of course in Darwinian terms that is not surprising. We never encounter the descendants of the birds that did not. Those happy few we meet are genetic copies of the tiny minority that did not fail. And each new generation, each new nesting season, like the quality control in a biscuit factory. filters out a few more duds, refreshing the genetic inheritance, refining the race. The fledgling poised on the edge of the nest represents a supremely Darwinian moment. To interfere is to foul the clear stream of evolution. Let the strong trees grow tall." Mrs had any problem with that. It was letting the weak trees not grow tall that troubled me.

I walked out on Saturday morning to find on the ground beneath the tits' nest a fledgling who had failed his Darwinian GCSE, cheeping. What to do? The dilemma seemed to encapsulate an agony at the very heart of the philosophy of freedom. Should I return him to his mother? Should I tip back into the tits' gene-pool a dodgy flyer, prejudicing the future of tits as yet unborn? What would Mrs Thatcher do? At difficult personal moments I always ask myself this. Keith Joseph, 1 think, would have left the bird, then spent the night in sleepless remorse at what he had done. She would have placed it kindly back in the nest, gone on to cut the DHSS fledgling benefit, and refused to reconcile — or even to connect — the two actions. One of the features that marked Mrs Thatcher out as an achiever was that she never had any trouble with this sort of thing. Asked to apply her political philosophy to the situation she would have replied that Conservatism hadn't got anything to do with birds.

And I? Well, I could write up this story, but there would have to be an ending. An unmerciful one would alienate readers. obstruct my career and thus. however marginally, downgrade my own life-chances. I fetched the stepladder. It was Darwin, you see, who, in this most unDarwinian act. guided my hand

SIR JOHN BANHAM'S years as director general of the Confedera-tion of British Industry have stood him in good stead in his dealings with politicians. Having been "invited" by Michael Howard to consider a site in Docklands for the new local government commission which he chairs. Banham is said to have told the environment secretary he is not prepared to have his staff traipsing half way to Essex. Envious environment department civil servants, preparing for their own exodus to Docklands, are expected this week to announce that Banham and his team will be based in smart central London offices. His stand against central government politicians will no doubt hearten the candidates for the post of chief executive of the commission. The favourite for the £80.000-a-year job is Rodney Brooke, 52, the former chief executive of Westminster city council. who now runs the Association of

Metropolitan Authorities. After four years of working for Dame Shirley Porter. Brooke left to head the Tory London Boroughs Association. He became secretary of the Labour-dominated AMA in 1990. Noted for his gravitas and dress sense. Brooke was on good terms with Banham when the latter was head of the Audit Commission. His 37 years in local government have taken him through all ranks. "Nobody knows more about local government than Rodney." said one former colleague. "Most of the children of council chief executives in this country seem to be his godsons or goddaughters or are married to his cousins. Anybody who could have survived as long in Lady Porter's service must know a thing or two."

• First it was leaves on the line. Then they blamed the wrong sort of snow. But BR commuters on the Norwich to Liverpool Street line were given the ultimate excuse at the weekend for their delay at Stratford. "We require written permission to move." said the loudspeaker message. Presumably it came by pony express or carrier pigeon as the train was stationary for 90 minutes.

Unlucky for some

THE timing of President Mitterrand's visit to Sarajevo could be portentous, for it is not the first time the French leader has stepped into controversy as the West contemplates military intervention. In January 1991 he submitted an 11th-hour peace plan to the UN Security Council, raising the possibility of sending his for-eign minister to Iraq to secure a negotiated settlement. The initiative failed, and within 48 hours the Gulf war had begun.

It would appear that Mitterrand's PR men have been reading their history books. Not only was June 28 the day in 1914 when Archduke Franz Ferdinand was assassinated in Sarajevo, starting the first world war, it is Saint Vitus's day, when according to legend the rivers of the Balkans will run blood-red at midnight. On June 28 1389 the imperial Turkish armies of Sultan Murat slaughtered the Serbian nobility in the battle of Kosovo and on that day in 1948 Marshal Tito defied Josef Stalin and declared his own brand of non-aligned com-

A REFORMING PRESIDENCY

The good news out of Lisbon is that the European Community summit failed to gloss over the profound anxieties about a European superstate articulated by the Danes' rejection of the Maastricht treaty. For the sake of an appearance of harmony the Commission and most of the 12 have been prepared to leave all difficult decisions for the British presidency to sort out after Wednesday. The predictable outcome of their efforts at evasion is that this summit was both indecisive and, even by EC standards, fractious. The communiqué referred to the ratification of Maastricht as though nothing had happened, but reality forced its way into their debates. The real question for the British presidency will be what to do about Maggnicht.

The bad news is that the EC has again shown itself incapable of action on the two most urgent questions before the Lisbon summit. On Yugoslavia, its disarray is complete. And in the one undisputed area of EC competence, trade policy, the 12 appear willing to risk the collapse of the world trading system rather than another bruising argument with France over farm subsidies. Yet failure to conclude the Uruguay Round would be vastly more significant than the collapse of Maastricht.

Following an acrimonious stand-off at Lisbon, John Major has now the dubious pleasure of brokering a compromise over Jacques Delors's brazen demand to increase the Commission's budget, currently underspent, by a third over the next five years. But the one clear decision out of the summit is a defeat for his strategy for the British presidency even before it begins. The admission of new members has been made contingent on agreement over the budget and on the entry into force of the Maastricht treaty. The summit has thus brought the EC to a juddering halt, unless it can resurrect Maastricht. The EC has no legal riposte to the fact this treaty cannot enter into force unless every EC member state ratifies it. What Lisbon shows is how far the EC's leaders are from fashioning a political response to their voters' swelling distrust of federalism. Mr Major expressed delight that any changes to EC institutions prior to its enlargement which the Commission had been actively planning before the Danish vote, had been "firmly squelched". But institutional reforms are in fact urgently required. Not in furtherence of M Delors's federal agenda, but to roll back the Commission's powers to reach international and local decisions.

At Lisbon, as at Maastricht last December, Mr Major homed in on the subsidiarity which it is Britain's pride to have inserted in the Maastricht treaty. Having made its ratification a point of British honour, his strategy appears to be to coax the Danes back on board by adding a binding protocol that will restrict the Commission's freedom to exercise the dramatic extension of its powers under the treaty.

The ambiguity of the treaty's subsidiarity clause makes that vital. Article 3b says that the Commission will act only if an objective desired by the EC cannot be achieved by member states acting alone. But this applies only to areas where the Commission shares competence with the Council of Ministers. And it is silent about who decides where power should reside, the Commission or governments.

Denmark's foreign minister, Uffe Ellemann-Jensen, needs more than a mere codicil to make Maastricht revived palatable to his voters. Their problem, as he said at Lisbon, is not just with the treaty but with the EC's general lack of openness and accountability. The codicil must make absolutely clear that it is up to governments to decide what to delegate upwards to the Commission, not the other way round.

But Mr Major must also make good his Lisbon pledge to ensure that the Commission hands back powers it already has, by revoking directives that do not measure up to a tightly drafted version of subsidiarity. Only by what amounts to a radical shift in the balance of power within the EC can he hope to salvage the treaty on which he has firmly, perhaps rashly, staked his word.

HIGH TIME TO STOP IT

As an old political fox, President Mitterrand has lost none of his talent for surprise. His flight to Sarajevo, arriving in the besieged Bosnian capital on the anniversary of the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand 78 years ago, has left his European Community colleagues aghast, wrongfooted his domestic critics, delighted thousands of hungry and despairing Sarajevans cowering in their cellars. His coup de théâtre may seem selfserving. But M Mitterrand has also demonstrated personal courage, responded to the growing western outrage at the indiscriminate shelling of civilians, and pointed up the futility of legalistic arguments about the use of force that look like indecision.

European governments, especially Britain, have argued strongly against intervention and peace-making by force, on the grounds that this would only suck the world into the maeistrom of ethnic hatreds and vendetta politics. Instead they have tried to tighten the diplomatic and economic noose around Serbia, in the naive belief that Slobodan Milosevic will call to heel the Serbian guerrilla gangs now plundering Bosnia.

As long as the primary objective was to restore a semblance of peace and prevent the Balkan conflagration spreading, this course could be defended. But night after night the pictures of civilians shot as they search for food, or blown up by mortars in their homes, have begun to change perceptions. Are the people of Sarajevo, like the Jews of the Warsaw ghetto, to be starved and shelled into submission while armed troops go from house to house in their chilling "ethnic deansing" operation?

It was the Americans who responded first to the public mood, hinting that they were now contemplating the use of force over Saraievo. Almost immediately the Europeans changed their tune. The Western European Union last week discussed logistics. The Lisbon summit produced a Delphic utterance about not excluding support for the use of force. Harassed United Nations officials now admit that if the convoy waits for a ceasefire to last a full 48 hours, it will never reach the city. The Serbian irregulars have no intention of letting up. And Croats and Muslims are taking advantage of every lull to fortify their own lines. Boutros Boutros Ghall, the forthright UN secretary general, has now delivered an ultimatum: unless attacks on the airport ended within 48 hours. the Security Council would meet today to consider other measures - in other words.

Securing the area around the airfield could take more than 100,000 men, and EC countries will not commit troops unless they can be withdrawn quickly. Europe and America could however provide military air cover for relief flights. They could attack artillery positions or Serbian supply lines and gun emplacements. Force means risk. The UN's new commitment to peace-keeping cannot avoid all risk. M Mitterrand implicitly challenged the artillery gunners to shoot him down; they would have fewer qualms in attacking a UN relief plane.

The West is proposing intervention not to end the civil war, but to save 300,000 civilians from disease and death. Lord Carrington's thankless task of negotiating a settlement must go on. Serbia must be isolated and contained: the kind of tacit help it is seeking from Greece in beating sanctions must be denied, and the West should be ready for further mischief-making by Mr Milosevic in Kosovo and Macedonia. Not all the armies of Europe can prevent a megalomaniac trying to ignite a Balkan war. But credibility of western values is at stake in Sarajevo. Wringing one's hands is a feeble response. At least M Mitterrand has done dramatically more than wring his hands.

BUBBLES FOR ALL

Champagne is being sold for less than £8 a bottle in British supermarkets this jolly June. This is not sparkling white wine artificially injected with fizz. It is the true juice, laboriously hand-turned and fermented naturally a second time by the methode champenoise in limestone caverns in the old French province of Champagne, as allegedly discovered by accident by the cellar-master monk Dom Perignon four centuries ago.

It is not going for a lot under £8: usually £7.99, on the marketing managers' insolent assumption that shoppers are thick, and look after the pounds, but let the pence look after themselves. But even the down-market stores, with their foundation motto "pile it high, sell it cheap", are offering champagne at prices almost as low as can be obtained by thrifty shoppers in French off-licences. This democratisation of champagne has been caused partly by the recession. In the sparkling days two long years ago, in spite of prices of the famous brands climbing towards £20 a bottle, sales of champagne were soaring so high that there was even talk of rationing. Since then sales (though not prices of the big-name brands) have plummeted and are still falling. And the supermarkets, which over the past five years have become the biggest wine merchants in the United Kingdom, are trying to drain their champagne lakes by cutting prices. But the sudden remarkable cheapness of champagne is a social as well as an economic phenomenon. The best things in life should be available to everybody in Mr Major's kingdom, which is aiming to be a classless democracy. National music day yesterday was designed to bring the finest and most elusive of the arts to a generally tone-deaf nation. "People's Saturday" at Wimbledon brought cut-price tickets and hearty cries of "Come on, Steffi" to the Centre Court, that conformist chapel of suburban gentility.

Champagne was developed as a huxury product, and has always been aimed with vast success at the British market. Bubbly and fizz were until recently upper-class synonyms for the liquid, and numerous aristocrats who wasted their inheritances in riotous living have been known as Champagne Charlie. More than four centuries ago, Thomas Shadwell could pronounce definitively: "The qualifications of a fine gentleman are to eat à la mode, drink champagne, dance jigs and play at tennis."

Champagne, tennis and fashionable eating have now become available for everyman and everywoman, though dancing jigs may still be confined to the "okay, yah" class. Bubbly is the one drink of which you never get a bad bottle, and which is alleged, with more poetry than truth not to give hangovers. The swizzle-stick, designed to remove those expensive bubbles, is a peculiarly iliogical English aberration.

Luxuries are positional not absolute goods. From cavemen to Dickens, oysters were a cheap form of food for the working man. According to folk legend, London apprentices demanded to have written into their articles that they should not be fed on the common fish, salmon, more than twice a week. One should eat and drink what one enjoys rather than what is fashionable. But Champagne Charlies and Charlenes of all classes can make bubbles while the sun shines by a trip to their local supermarker.

Health care in London: the challenge and the real prize

From the Chairman of Hammersmith and Queen Charlotte's Special Health Authority

Sir. The King's Fund Commission is to be congratulated on producing a report (details and leading article. June 24) that highlights the problems of London's health care and suggests, at least in broad and understandably cautious outline, a set of radical solutions.

No one doubts the central thesis: that there are too many acute hospitals in inner London, too much duplication of specialty services, and that as a result some hospitals should close. But enthusiasm for the dev-elopment of primary and community care appears to have persuaded the commission that almost all the revenue released by hospital closures can be withdrawn from the acute sector. This is not so.

Unless a substantial proportion of this money is reallocated to the hospitals that survive, existing under-utilisation (reflected in wards closed for part of the year and underused capital equipment) will con-tinue. And Londoners' health care will not improve.

The commission has also not given sufficient thought to the structure of research and teaching. Again, no one doubts its central thesis: that increased concentration, underpinned by strengthened basic science, is desirable. But that is not compatible with divorcing, as the commission suggests, research and teaching institutions from their hospitals, relying instead on a vaguely defined series of contracts with health-care providers.

Research and teaching will continue to be satisfactorily carried out only by institutions for which that is the primary responsibility and in which research, teaching and service responsibilities are fully integrated.

We have a unique opportunity to take difficult decisions about London a new government, a new secretary of state, a new minister of health, a new permanent secretary. There appears to be the political will to act, even though the King's Fund's suggested sweetener of £250 million to develop primary and community care may not be immediately forthcoming.

The real prize is a radical, logical redistribution of London's resources in a way that improves care and

From Mr Michael Harmer

Sir, The map which you published on June 24 identifies 15 London hospitals facing possible closure. Of these one, St Bartholomew's, is the oldest in Britain (with the possible exception of St Bartholomew's, Rochester): it is among the oldest in Europe and indeed in the world.

I find it incredible that the chairman of the King's Fund Commission can write: "the status quo is not an option this time". By what right can any ephemeral politician, financier or bureaucrat decide that the Royal Hospital, founded by Rahere In 1123, is redundant? Bart's, where I qualified as a surgeon in 1979, may indeed need improvement: this it has achieved several times during the last eight centuries. I do not doubt that it will do the same in the twenty-first. Yours faithfully, MICHAEL HARMER, Perrot Wood, Graffham, Petworth, Sussex.

ently accepts without question the idea that London hospitals should serve the needs of patients living in their immediate vicinity. There is no reason why their resources and skills should not continue to be available to others in areas less well served, in return for some sharing of the cost.

A few years ago the life of a member of my family was saved by the specialist treatment of a London teaching hospital to which referral had been made from a rural hospital unable to diagnose the disease. The treatment was not particularly "glamorous" or "high-tech". It was simply better, owing to the concentration of experience and skills which a large teaching hospital can offer.

Yours faithfully, JAMES JOHNSTON, As from: 82 Ingelow Road, SW8.

From Mr Alan Meyer

Sir, Whilst it may well be correct, as David Willens writes ("Hospitals on the critical list", June 23), that people's needs no longer require so many teaching hospitals in central London, they need hospital facilities. especially casualty and outpatient departments, particularly in the frequent absence of other services at weekends and at night.

The problem which has not been faced in moving the Charing Cross and St George's hospitals out of the central area is that greater distances and of the central area is that greater distances. and traffic density create a need for more ambulances.

You cannot move hospitals away without producing a vastly upgraded London ambulance service. That has been overlooked so far and the problem will be greatly exacerbated when the Westminster Hospital closes in 1993.

Yours faithfully. ALAN MEYER. Chairman, The Westminster Hospitals Development Fund, 10 Carteret Street. Queen Anne's Gate, SW1.

From Mr Roger Fox Sir. David Willetts omits the one element that any strategy for London hospitals should include.

London is a centre for medical excellence with an international reputation. We should be proud of it and develop policies to sustain its position. I fear that inappropriate changes to the structure of London hospitals and research institutions could destroy the basis of decades of achievement.

It has to be recognised that it is the interplay, or competition, between relatively small units which supplies the thrust for advance. Centralisation and amalgamation (beloved of old-style socialists) could undermine the achievements of the present

Large hospitals and research centres have diseconomies of scale which could be costly in terms both of research and competition in the internal market.

Electricity research

From Sir Alan Cottrell, FRS, FEng Sir. Professor Ian Fells (letter, June 24) omitted to point out the worst consequences of the decimation of research by the privatised electricity supply industry. The technical underpinning of the industry will be weakened so much that I predict, in a few year's time, during some severe winter, supplies over a large region of the country will collapse, with heavy losses of industrial production. This will engender a demand that the industry create an adequate technical base. And this in turn will simply recycle us back to the early postwar decision to equip the Central Electricity Generating Board with research departments, the loss of which is so properly criticised by Professor Fells.

Yours faithfully.

The Cottage, Rock Mount.

Near Peel, Isie of Man.

From Mr Bruce J. Dawson Sir. Water abstracted from rivers is used to supply the public with what it considers to be a limitless resource. It would be wrong to lay the full blame for high abstraction rates from rivers at the door of the statutory water companies, who have a legal obligation to supply their consumers.

Water is not a limitless resource in the southeast of England. Statistics quoted at a recent Institute of Water and Environmental Management meeting indicate that the rainfall (from which our drinking water originates) per capita in this region is currently comparable to that of the desert-covered Middle East states. In preparing a recently published book on Suez, I found not only whole files excluded from the appropriate annual release but also particular documents within a file. For example, at the most critical stage of the conflict, two cabinet meetings were held on November 2, 1956. The earlier minutes have been withheld until 2007. Minutes of other meetings, some one might think highly embarrassing to Britain even in retrospect, are freely available.

Why the distinction? One quite possible explanation could be that covert action against Nasser was discussed: that, as I understand it, would trigger the reflexes of the "weeders", who have been told to exclude matters that fall within certain categories.

Yours faithfully KEITH KYLE 25 Oppidans Road, NW3. June 19.

Lib Dems and media From Mr Matthew Taylor, MP for Truro (Liberal Democrat)

Sir. I was surprised to read your article of June 22, headed "Lib-Dems 'biggest election bullies'", about a report issued by the British executive of the International Press Institute on the attitude of reporters. and broadcasters in particular, to politicians during the general elec-tion campaign. Surprised, because you reported the IPI criticisms of the Liberal Democrat campaign without at any stage seeking our response.

To suggest, as the IPI report does, that we could "bully" Channel Four is frankly ludicrous. Channel Four invited Paddy Ashdown to appear as the lead story on the day we launched our manifesto, an offer he accepted and arranged his time accordingly. For their own reasons, within three hours of the programme, they withdrew that invitation and asked him to be interviewed on the second part of the programme. He was unable to accept that revised invitation. Channel Four can hardly complain about the result of their change of mind. No journalist who travelled with

Paddy Ashdown during the campaign could possibly deny that he was the most accessible of the three party leaders. It was disheartening that some broadcasters chose to abuse that accessibility by plaguing him, and we therefore attempted to control it - but he remained throughout the most accessible of the three leaders.

All serious points of view should be aired during an election campaign — and Liberal Democrats sought such a fair hearing.

Yours faithfully, MATTHEW TAYLOR (Chairman, Campaigns and Communications, Liberal Democrats). House of Commons.

Nature notes

THE first young sand martins are now out of the nest and beginning to wander about the countryside, often visiting other colonies at their next holes in sandbanks and quarries. At night they roost in reedbeds, where the adults and the second brood of young will join them towards summn. Young long-tailed tits sit preeming in the bushes with their parents: they can be distinguished from the adults by their much darker cheeks. On northern moors and mountains, young wheatears have left the nest, which is usually in a crack in a stone wall or a rabbit burrow. They have speckled feathers, unlike the dapper grey adults, and when alarmed will often dart into a hole rather than fly away. Everywhere the flowers of high paying the mortgage.

The Church is not always so relaxed abour other forms of business. The idea of the "enterprise culture" is disdained. Business is the domain of hard-faced men in suits: home ownership is about families, house groups, coffee mornings. The current housing crisis suggests that we have got things the wrong way round. Sure enough, everybody is aware of the growth of homelessness and the flood of repossessions due to mortgage default, but the implications for our property-owning democracy have not yet fully struck us. Indeed, we have often been vague about the injustice at the heart of our housing arrangements. Council tenants have always been treated badly, compared with house buyers. Tax subsidy for house purchase has long been available to anybody with reasonable prospects. Assistance for council tenants is invariably means-tested, the landlord has often been hard or impossible to deal with, and at the end of a working life, you had nothing for the rent you had paid. So, two families sitting in the same new, one buying, one renting their home, were always blessed somewhat unequally — not only by life, but by the state. But this was just the good old way of the good old English class system. This unfairness may also explain in part why there are so few council tenants in thurth.

This discrimination has now got wildly out of hand, and the Church is catching on to the fact that our housing habits have become a curse rather than a blessing. The story is familiar. Lenders began to make prospective buyers offers they couldn't refuse — up to four times joint income. Even so, many council tenants, steeped in the traditional lore that debt brings catastrophe, were reluctant to join in. But then they too were made unrefusable offers - to buy the very house they are renting at a knockdown price, with absolutely no risk!
The incredibly respectable lenders didn't even insist that we should actually spend what they lent us on housing, and a quarter of what is borrowed goes into cars, holidays, and the rest. So of the £8 billion mortgage interest tax relief sup-posedly subsidising house purchase, £2 billion is paying for other consumer goodies. In the meantime, council tenants have seen massive rent rises, cuts in benefit, and social housing completions a quarter of what they were in 1979. This makes it certain that a growing family will always be on the waiting list for suitable accommodation, and also certain that their children will have to buy rather than rent. This critical shortage of rented accommodation has led to the colourful variety of homeless that we now see all round London - the spaced-out but street-smart kids on the Strand; the successors to the first Elizabeth's discharged soldiers and sturdy beggars camped in Lincoln's Inn Fields; and most desperate of all, the thousands of families tucked away out of sight in the bed and breakfast hotels of Bayswater and Paddington.

• We need an enterprise culture that is based on new skills. rather than on metropolitan hype

It gets worse. People bought rather than rented because property seemed the only surefire bet against inflation. What on earth did we think we were doing? We plunged our savings into the form of saving most likely simply to cause inflation; and so it came to pass. The least secure of those who got into home ownership have lost the lot as the boom has crashed. Why did nobody say this was Vanity Fair, not the Strait and Narrow Way? Now it has become clear, but too late for the 80,000 people who will lose their homes this year.

And worse still, savings that have been sunk in housing have been denied to other objects, like productive industry. We have here not just a failure of housing policy but of economic management.

The state of the s

Institutions ostensibly lending for house purchase have pumped billions into consumer credit at subsidised rates of interest. This, coupled with tax cuts, gave us an import led consumer boom, corrected by one economic instrument — high interest rates. People's mortgages rocketed, and so did the problems of the businesses they owned or that employed them. Then it all went bust — house prices fell, the businesses went broke, the prices fell, the businesses went broke, the prices fell, the businesses went broke, the mortgage holders got the sack.

It is all ending in tears. The fault lies not with individuals or with lending institutions, but with a thoroughly wrongheaded kind of public policy. Maybe the general election result failed to deal out retribution, but we can't go on like this. So what do we do?

First, make it sensible to rent. We have twice as many homeowners as most of our more prosperous European neighour more prosperous European neigh-bours, who are quite happy to rent their housing for much or all of their lives. This means switching incentives from homeownership to social housing, with the object of increasing the number of people who are quite happy to rent their accommodation. This is obviously a long term objective, seeking to change our housing culture quite showly a long term objective. housing culture quite sharply - but it has to start now, We also need an enterprise culture that is based on new skills among the whole people, rather than in the metropolitan hype that rightly offended so many in the Churches. We have had some excuse for ... avoiding the fact that acceptable pros-avoiding the fact that acceptable prosperity is delivered largely through successful business activity. Most of this activity is risky, and has to find backers, be they ever so respectable, to take a chance on the future.

The irony is that while the risk-taking enterprise culture was being preached so stridently, it was not really being practised. Rather, the illusion was created that your little mortgaged nest was the safest way to save for your old age. The outcome has been an economy made too dangerous to take risks in. Policy needs to change but again, so does our culture.

We shall know that this has happened when bankruptcy and unemployment loom as large in the public demondogy as do morreage rates and repossessions.

JOY NICHOLS

Joy Nichols, comedienne and actress, died in New York on June 23 aged 66. She was born on February 17, 1926.

JOY Nichols was one of the nation's favourite showbusiness personalities of the early post-war years. She was an excellent commedienne with a fine singing voice who achieved almost instant fame co-starring with Jimmy Ed-wards and Jack Bentley in the long-running radio series Take It From Here, and her bouncy, sparkling, whole-some sense of fun was irresistible.

Indeed, the very wholesomeness of her personality coupled with good looks enabled the writers Frank Muir and Denis Norden to slip into the script the occasional joke that in those stiff-backed BBC days was considered risque. Her comic timing was equal to that of her fellow comedians and the sense of cameraderie the trio achieved, even when the script had them arguing, was warming to the millions who tuned in each

Her radio fame, which in the late Forties and Fifties was the equivalent of television stardom today, led to her being offered the lead in the London West End production of The Pyjama Game in 1955. The show ran for 18 months and her exuberant singing of "Hey There" and "I'm Not At All In Love", were regular show-stoppers. The Australian-born actress, who first became a radio star there aged seven, was married in 1949, at the height of her radio fame in Britain, to the American singer Waliy Peterson. They had three children but were divorced after 28 years.

Soon after her success in The Pyjama Game she decided to consolidate her career success in America but it did not work, at least not immediately. American Equity, the actors' union, made her wait for a year before letting her work there but even then the parts did not come quickly. After three years of living frugally and playing small roles, she landed one of the leads in the Broadway production of the musical Fiorello. She was 33 and looked destined for stardom but it never quite happened.

After ten years in America she returned to London. In 1969 she was to open at the Palace Theatre in London in the key role of Madame Defarge in the musical Two Cities, but she walked out during rehearsals amid rumours that she had fallen out with the star, Edward Woodward. It was to be six years before she reappeared, picked for what was a minor role in yet another musical, Great Expectations, with Sir John Mills and Moira

Her fresh and personal approach to gastronomy transformed the genre from mere information to high art Indeed, she won the much quoted praise of W. H. #### Sir Charles Groves

THE death of Sir Charles Groves (obituary, June 22) will bring great sadness to music lovers. He took over in 1951 from Rudolf Schwarz as conductor of the Bourne-mouth "Municipal" Orches-tra following a period as conductor of the BBC Northern Orchestra. This was a particularly difficult time for music in Bournemouth as the municipal corporation was becoming reluctant to provide money for an orchestra that "was providing a luxury for the few at the expense of the many".

Only a man with a big heart and a taste for adven-ture would have abandoned the security of a BBC post to pilot an orchestra through such rough waters. Charles Groves would dis-claim credit for saving music for Bournemouth and, as it has turned out, the whole of the West Country. It was the spirit of music which refused to die when the hand of officialdom was turned against it. For thousands of listeners and for the players themselves he was the living symbol of militant faith in art. To Charles Groves the course to steer was obvious to turn a "municipal" orchestra into a regional concern, with as many local authorities as possible to share the finan-cial burden. With the ap-pointment of Kenneth Matchett, an experienced orchestral administrator, they set about the task of forming the "Orchestra of the West" Out of municipal indifference the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra was born and we all owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Charles Groves.

Charles May

SIR Charles Groves had a remarkable knack of recognising and fostering new young conducting talent.

Edward Smith

SIR Charles Groves was principal conductor of the Guildford Philharmonic Orchestra from 1986 to 1992. Sir Charles took up this post following a petition signed by 65 members of the orchestra.

He steered the orchestra through six successful seasons, maintaining standards both of playing and reper-toire, and like his predecessor, Vernon Handley, championing the works of British composers and insisting that Guildford audiences be challenged with new works as well as luiled by established favourites.

Hugh Bean and John Ludlow, joint leaders, paid tribute to his great musicianship. personal kindness and interest in the musicians, and commented on the privilege and benefit of contact with a musician who combined dignity, artistry and integrity.

HARRY EAGLE

Harry Eagle, a medical scientist whose discovery of a method for growing human cells in test tubes opened the way for new redefects and cancers, died of cancer at Port Chester. New York, on June 12 aged 86. He was born on July 13, 1905.

"EAGLE's growth medium", as it became known in laboratories throughout the world, was Harry Eagle's most famous achievement, but it was far from being his only one. In an active research career that spanned more than six decades, he made discoveries which had a profound effect on many areas of medicine. Growing up in Baltimore, Eagle graduated from the medical school of Johns Hopkins University in 1927 and became director of its venereal disease research laboratory and of its laboratory of experimental therapeutics. It was during this period, in the early 1940s, that he devised a diagnostic test for syphilis and then helped to discover the value of penicillin in treating the disease. He also found that penicillin could be used to prevent gonorrhoea when taken soon after exposure to

From 1947 until 1961 Eagle worked at the National Institute of Health, where his major contributions included the discovery that blood clotting is an enzyme process; the development of a treatment for arsenic poisoning; a cure for trypanosomiasis (African sleeping sickness): and the description of the metabolic differences between normal and cancerous cells. He also advanced cancer chemotherapy and worked on a four-member team that developed a freeze-drying technique for long-term storage of perishable life-saving serums. His formulation of the essential compounds needed to sustain the reproduction of human and other mammalian cells in the laboratory came in 1959. Eagle established a reputation as a likeable man of absolute integrity, but one who was not particularly tol-erant of less gifted colleagues. He left government service in 1961 to join the Cancer Re-search Centre at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, which was being set up by New York's Shiva University.

The offer was to start a new research laboratory with unlimited equipment of his own choice, at double the salary he was then getting. Eagle ac-cepted and stayed there for the rest of his career, retiring as director in 1988, but remaining active until he became ill last year.

At various times, Eagle was president of the Society of American Microbiologists, the American Association of Immunology, and the Society of Experimental Biology and Medicine. He published widely in scientific journals, and among many honours won the Waterford International Biomedical Award and the Eli Lilly Award in Bacteriology. In 1987, president Ronald Reagan conferred on him the National Medal of Science, America's highest scientific honour. Harry Eagle is survived by his wife, Hope, to whom he was married for 64 years, and one daughter.

PROF EVA SCHAPER

Professor Eva Schaper, philosopher, died on June il aged 67. She was born at Iserlohn in Germany on October 1, 1924.

EVA Schaper's career coincided with a remarkable upsurge in interest in aesthetics amongst analytic philosophers in the English speaking world. She played her part in this, especially through her own published work which comprised two books and more than 40 published papers, a considerable output for a philosopher. She also worked with the Thyssen Philosophy Group in the late Seventies and Eighties and was president of the British Society for Aesthetics.

Her early years in Germany gave her a philosophi-cal breadth which was tempered by an analytical and critical sharpness very much in tune with modern analytic standards. She graduated from the University of Münster and, after a short spell at University College, Bangor, spent the rest of her career at th University of Glasgow, latter ly (1977-90) as titular profes sor of logic.

She came to be regarded as a specialist in Kantian aesthetics, and her second book. Studies in Kantian Aesthetics, which was published in 1979, marked her out as the leading scholar in this field in Britain; indeed, current interest in Kantian aesthetics owes much to her example. Nevertheless, probably her single most frequently cited paper is on fiction and belief and this reflects her own deep interest in literature. She was also very knowledgeable about the visual arts.

In private she was more diffident about her abilities than she need have been. But. scholarship apart, she will be remembered for her personal kindness to students and to

Adelina Patti's first appearance in London was two years earlier at the age of 18 as Amina in La Sonnambula, where she was an immediate success. It was said that with her singing Reemed a perfectly natural human function, not an elaborately taught accomplishment. ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA M. Florow's Martha was reproduced on Saturday night, with yet another (a third) representative of the heroine. The first Martha having failed to win the good graces of the public, and the second (Mademoiselle Fioretti)-much to the regret of all lovers of genuine singing-having absconded without notice, Mademoiselle Adelina Patti was enlisted as the substitute to the unanimous satisfaction of a ence. As an instance of this young lady's very remarkable ability in making much out of little, her performance of Lady Enrichetta may fairly be cited. Madame Bosio, who-together with almost every one of her contemporaries—would see nothing dramatic in the part, used to content herself (and enchant her admirers) with looking like a lady and singing like a nightingale. Madernoiselle Patti, however, has the dramatic instinct so strongly within her that she detects character, or at least the germ of character, where others fail to perceive it. Her Martha is as to perceive it. Her Martha is as graceful a bit of acting, half comedy, half sentiment, by turns vivacious and impassioned, as could be witnessed. The wayward caprices, the sty coquettish touches—"espitegieries," as the French say—that mark the earlier scenes, before Lady Enrichetta has become Martha, and Martha sentimental, are as prettily

the sentimental, are as prettily conceived as the sentimental tone that colours her interviews with the moody love-struck earnestness in all Mademol-selle Patti does; and thus her Martha stands before us, not an ingenious piece of mechani-cal contrivance, ever and anon emitting soft and dulcet sounds, but a portrait of humanity, life-like, winning and full of charm. The ripeness of histrionic perception, exhibited at so early an age, is the gift which, more than any other, is liable to influence the future career of Mademoiselle Patti. Since 1861, when she first took London by assault-for never was a more sudden and unexpected apparition-it has with gradually increasing convincingness arrested the attention of those who, from the first, impressed with her singular capacity (she was scarcely 18 when she made her debut), have carefully watched her progress. The music of M. Flotow was not likely to offer any difficulties to so accomplished a vocalist; and, on the whole, it would be difficult to imagine it better sung. The vivacity she imparts to the quartet at the spinning wheels, the graceful feeling and unobtrusive sweetness with which she warbles-in its native unadorned simplicity—the ex-quisite romance, "Qui sola vergin rosa" ("The last rose of summer"), are alike worthy praise. Both quarter and ro-mance were encored on Saturday night-the latter with enthusiasm; and no wonder, for a more faultless specimen of

ballad singing has rarely been CONCERTS

Search for Aids vaccine boosted by animal 'host'

By Nigel Hawkes, science editor

THE search for a vaccine against Aids should be speeded by the discovery that an animal species, the pigtail macaque, can be infected with the virus responsible for the disease, HIV.

The discovery, to be announced in this week's issue of Science, will help researchers by providing a good model for the development of the disease in humans. Previously only the chimpanzee and the gibbon have been shown to be susceptible to HIV, and both are endangered species.

The lack of a useful experimental animal has forced many scientists to work on the

Major takes tough line on Europe

would reverse the centralising features of previous treaties, but Lady Thatcher said yesterday it would lead to a further massive transfer of power to Brussels. "Maastricht is a treaty too far."

She would vote against the ratification Bill in the Lords, she said. She urged Conservative MPs to "vote for because they were answerable to their constituents. She also disputed the reappointment of Jacques Delors as European Commission president as 'wrong" and described subsidisrity, the principle of minimum interference which Mr Major wants strengthened, as 'gobbledygook".

Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, said the former prime minister had always argued strongly and then signed up to Community deals during her tenure. "I believe her arguments are to some considerable extent out of date," he said on BBC Radio 4's The World This Weekend programme.

Senior Tories said her ability to inspire the backbenches in the Lords is limited.

related simian immunodeficiency virus (SIV) which infects rhesus macaques. But SIV is not the same as HIV, which has made the work of doubtful relevance to Aids.

The fact that HIV will infect one variety of macaque but not another has come as a surprise. For a long time, nobody even tried the pigtail macaque: "I guess people thought a macaque is a ma-caque," said William Morton, of the University of Washington, which is jointly responsible for the discovery with Northwestern University in Chicago.

Whether the pigtail ma-caques will get full-blown Aids is not yet clear, but all eight injected with the virus in the past year are now HIVpositive. The animals may also make possible studies of the spread of Aids, a controversial subject in the light of claims last week from Birmingham that one HIV-positive man has been responsible for infecting at least four women with the virus.

The low rate of transmission of the virus in normal heterosexual intercourse has led some researchers to doubt the claims. According to the World Health Organisation, the chances of catching the virus through unprotected vaginal intercourse range from one in a thousand to one in a hundred. This may help to explain why the long-predicted heterosexual Aids epidemic is slow to develop.

The aftermath of the Birmingham case is becoming a battle between those who say that a heterosexual epidemic is unlikely or impossible, and those who claim that it is already beginning, but is still at a very low level. Most of the official Aids bodies, and the Department of Health, hold the latter view.

An important but unknown element in the rate of spread is the frequency of other sexual practices beween heterosexuals, including anal intercourse. No re-liable figures exist, though there is evidence of wide variations between different cultures, which may help explain the differing rates of increase in Aids in different countries.

MPs and foghorns blast their their way to musical stardom

By Alan Hamilton

COURAGEOUS is the only word to describe the partieipation in one of the big events of National Music Day yesterday of a small band of self-confessed hu-man foghorus. Bearing banners declaring "Tone deaf and proud of it," they emerged from the privacy of their steam-filled bathrooms and mingled with the harmonious thousands gathered on Clapham Common in south London.

At the open-air concert and community singing event they positioned themselves close to the giant loudspeaker banks. When the 1,996 musicians present - amateur, professional and plain duff — were enjoined to launch into Lennon and McCartney's With A Little Help From My Friends, the eff-orts of the foghorns were mercifully drowned out.

John Elenor, their leader and a professional planist, has, through evening classes, taught to sing more than 200 people who were brought up believing they could not manage a note. "Anyone can sing if properly taught," Mr Elenor said, as his choir cleared their throats to tackle Dancing in the Street.

National Music Day was marked by more than 1,500 events across the country and was supported by a £100,000 grant from the department of David Mellor, secretary of state for national heritage — and community singing. The event was dreamed up by Mick Jagger, who, now that he is nearly 50, is about to have his lips listed by Mr Mellor's ministry as a nat-musicians, but demurred at giving a solo number. Mr Jagger also declined to per-form, being too busy re-cording the event on a hand-held video camera.

All manner of instruments turned up, from the Central Band of the RAF to Keziah Thomas, 12, who had brought her harp.

Consider this coincidence. On Tuesday, June 9, the Libyan ambassador to Tunis travelled to Geneva, where he spent two hours supplying a British supplying a British charge d'affaires with detailed information on the tailed information on the extent of Libya's long-standing support for the IRA. The Foreign Office has since indicated that the Libyan information, while not complete, was of good quality.

Two days later, the

Yesterday's enemies, it appears, can become tomorrow's minority partners. Coincidence, or another triumph for Mr Row-land's brand of desert

Home loan debt provisions hit £1.2bn 'and will climb'

THE top 20 building societies made bad debt provisions totalling £1.2 billion last year and these are likely to be 25 per cent higher this year, according to a report published today by UBS Phillips & Drew, the

Despite the worst housing reces-sion since the Second World War, John Wriglesworth, the author, forecasts that all the largest 20 societies as well as Abbey National will maintain their strong capital ratios. None of the top 20 societies will need rescuing in the way that the Town & Country Building Society was by the Woolwich last year, after the intervention of the Building Societies Commission. Similarly, there should be no need for more mergers like that of the Learnington Spa with the Bradford & Bingley, says Mr Wriglesworth. "The few well publicised rescue mergers over the last two years have now cleared the industry of all significant-sized problem societies," says the report. Should a smaller society need help in the future, it will find it from a larger society, says the report. This is despite claims from the chief executives of leading societies that they will not rescue societies that have savings or lent unwisely

The Cheltenham & Gloucester found a worse mortgage book than it expected when it took over the Portsmouth Building Society last year. ### Power prices threaten 7,000 jobs at ICI

By Ross Tieman, industrial correspondent

IMPERIAL Chemical Industries says it will run down and close its £1.5 billion-a-year UK chlorine business, which provides 7,000 jobs and underpins 11,000 others, unless a steep rise in electricity costs is reversed.

Profits at the business, Britain's biggest industrial user of electricity, have been virtu-ally wiped out by the combined effects of recession and a 40 per cent surge in bulk power prices in the wake of the electricity industry's pri-

Chris Hampson, a main board director of ICI, said: 'If we don't get some relief, what we will see is a progressive closure, a shutdown of the business." Job losses could begin within months, ecause investment needed to keep the business competitive could no longer be justified.

Bob Hunt, the managing director of ICI Chlor-Chemifrom Australasia and America because it could no longer compete on price. The situation would worsen if power prices continued to rise.

The public warning that the future of the business is under threat follows more than a year of fruitless talks between ICI and Britain's two biggest electricity groups, National Power and Power-Gen. ICI has also made repeated pleas for intervention to ministers, including Tim Eggar, the energy minister.

Mike Brogden, chief executive of ICI Chemicals & Polymers, said: "The price we are paying for electricity is mov-ing way out of line with the price being paid by our international competitors."

ICI said power price rises in the wake of electricity privatisation were "unnecessary and unjustified, especially in the present economic recession". The company also said the market for electricity, which has been the subject of repeated complaints from large industrial users, was "uncompetitive". The company has been buying its power in the pool, or spot market, and has resorted to halting production at its plants when prices rise. National Power, Britain's biggest power company, said it had offered ICI power "at contracts which reflect our costs". A spokesman said there was "prima facie evidence that large users abroad do get preferential prices". In Britain, subsidies were prohibited, he said.

Since ICI and its power suppliers are unable to reach an accord, the government is under growing pressure to intervene. ICI's chlorine business, which exports half its El.5 billion-a-year output, employs 7,000 people. The company estimates that a further 11,000 people directly depend on it for their jobs.

Closure or contraction of ICI's largest chlorine plant, at Runcorn, Cheshire, which employs 4,000 people, would have a disastrous effect on a local economy already blighted by high unemployment. Another 3,000 people produce chlorine derivatives at Hillhouse, near Fleetwood, Lancashire, at Wilton, on Teesside, and at Lostock, in Chrishine

ICI is one of Britain's most successful manufacturing companies and the world's third-largest chlorine producer, with a 5 per cent share of world production. Chlorine is employed in the manufacture of plastics, for industrial cleaning and for purifying water. It is produced by passing electricity through brine. In Britain electricity accounts for haif of production costs.

ICI said it had made strenuous, and successful, efforts to reduce costs in the business, but its achievements had been undermined by the rise in power prices.

Every two minutes, one British firm goes bust

BY OUR INDUSTRIAL CORRESPONDENT

THE rate of business failures we see no signs of a let-up in reached a record peak during the first half of the year. Despite government claims that recovery had begun, 30,722 companies collapsed, according to Dun & Bradstreet, the business information group.

With one British company going out of business every two minutes of the working day, the rate of failures was twice the level of 1990, and far higher than recorded at any stage of the recession at the beginning of the 1980s. Personal bankruptcies rocketed during the first six months of 1992, to a level 51 per cent higher than during the same period a year ago.

Philip Mellor, the marketing director of D&B, said: The rate of business failure is continuing to increase and the collapse of small businesses. However, he said there was some evidence that the rate of failure among larger com-panies had slowed. During the first quarter of the year. 14,881 companies collapsed. During the latest three months, D&B has already recorded 15,841 company failures, a 6.5 per cent rise. The rate of company liquidations is 9.8 per cent above the same months a year ago. Much of the overall increase is accounted for by a surge in personal bankruptcies.

Mr Mellor said: "This pattern is following previous recessionary cycles where the pace of failure continues at a high level for one to two years after a recession has ended."

BRITAIN'S gross domestic product will show virtually no growth in 1992 on an annual basis, but a significant strengthening of the economy should become evident in the quarterly GDP figures from the present quarter onwards, according to the London Business School's quarterly economic outlook.

In the long term, the economy is likely to return to the 3 per cent growth rates it enjoyed in the early 1980s, but inflation will remain well above the government's target of 2 per cent and unemployment will rise to 3 million early next year. High made and budget deficits will continue to dog government policy at least until the middle of the decade, and exclude any tax cuts before the next election. However, short-term interest rates should fall to about 6 or 7 per cent by 1996.

The LBS forecast, published this morning, often reflects thinking similar to that of Treasury economists. It has GDP rising by only 0.1 per cent this year, compared with 1991. ### Introducing a unique mortgage.

If interest rates go up-you win. If they go down -you win.

How can you be sure that today's fixed-rate mortgages will look quite as appealing tomorrow, or indeed, that variable rates won't continue to go down? Who knows?

John Charcol are pleased to introduce another first in the UK; a mortgage that allows you to take half your loan at a fixed rate of 9.99% (11.9% APR), and the remaining half at a variable rate of 9.99% (11.9% APR). Both rates are excellent in their own right. The fixed component is guaranteed until 1st September 1995.

Meanwhile, its variable counterpart - which is at a discount to the lender's normal rate until 31st January 1993 - will move in line with top twenty building society rates.

If you're in two minds as to which way interest rates will go and wish to be prudent, please call John Charcol now on (071) 589 7080 for a written quotation. Or write to us at (FIMBRA) Mercury House, 195 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RE.

Pointed ears lead auction flop

FROM PHILIP ROBINSON IN NEW YORK

IT WAS a bit of a disappointment for Sotheby's, the world's largest auction house. The pair of pointed ears used by Mr Spock in the 1984 film Star Trek III failed to make its $4.500 reserve price. Bids for the 278-ton replica of the HMS Bounty used in the 1962 remake of the mutiny and put up for sale by Ted Turner, CNN's owner, almost sank without trace. He was hoping for $2.5 million. Bids barely topped $1.4 million. The two lots were part of an auction of Hollywood and Rock 'n' Roll Memorabilia which Sotheby's had hoped would fetch $2.8 million, but raised just $608,800. Sale experts say the figure provides a further example of the effects of recession in America: Sotheby's lost $5.7 million in the first three months of this year, and made only $13 million last year. In the heady days of 1989 and 1990, net profits were close to $100 million The recessionary effects have also hit Alfred Tamb-man, Sotheby's owner and chairman, whose wealth is tied into the ailing commercial property market through his ownership of shopping mails. His personal fortune has plunged from $2 billion to about $600 million in the past two years.

The falling price of Sotheby's shares this year has cut his riches by almost $100 million; he is selling more than a third of his stake in a public offering to raise $100 million and has pledged 58 per cent of his remaining shares as collateral for a loan, believed to be with CitiCorp. None of the pro-ceeds from the offer for sale will go to Sotheby's, whose statements say Mr Taubman is raising the money to improve his liquidity.

Mr Taubman, whose office of the total. The 67-year-old property developer rescued Sotheby's from an unwanted bid in 1983 with an offer of $47 million. He pocketed $47 million when he took the auctioneer public again in 1988. and kept 93 per cent of the voting stock.

Sotheby's shares closed on Friday at $12.125, already $1.50 below the maximum price at which Mr Taubman is allowed to sell his shares.

LENDERS could be forced by the government to pay a levy to fund debt advice if they do not voluntarily give more generously over the next two years, Sir George Blunden, chair-man of the Money Advice Trust, said today.
Publishing the first annual report of the trust, a charity set up in 1990 to help channel private sector funds into money advice projects, Sir George described the initial response as disappointing. Only £250,000 had been donated. by 19 different organisations, directly to the trust in 1991 far short of its £3 million target. In addition, the trust had identified £750,000 given by private-sector institutions directly to money advice projects such as the Citizens' Advice Bureaux.

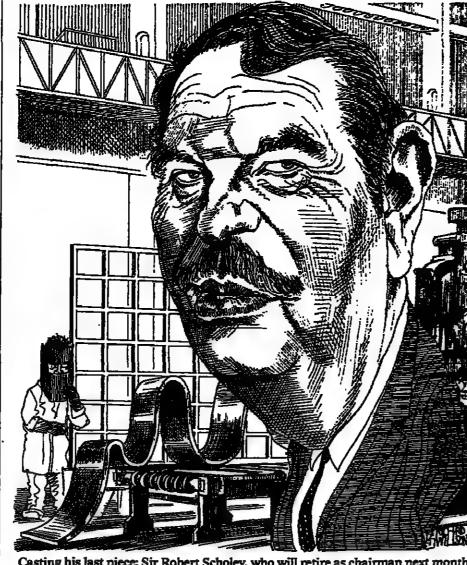

Sir George singled out the Midland bank, the Abbey National and the electricity companies for a particularly ungenerous response this year and said: "If by the end of our third year we don't get the growth we are expecting, we will have to approach the government and ask it to look seriously at the idea of a statutory levy [proposed by the National Consumer Council in February]. We are not simply going to go away. The private sector must support money advice.".

Most building societies and the Scottish banks have been conspicuously unwilling to commit money to the trust or directly, despite being told by trustees of the charity that the appeal is not charitable but a call to social responsibility."

Building societies came under pressure from the government of the beginning of ernment at the beginning of this year to give more to fund money advice. Since then only a handful have promised funding. The Woolwich and Bradford & Bingley building societies each pledged £50,000 for 1992 and each of the next two years.

British Steel to unveil big loss

SIR Robert Scholey will need all of his legendary Yorkshire toughness today when he unveils heavy losses at British Steel on the eve of his retirement from the board (Ross Tieman writes).

During his six-year tenure as chairman of the former state steel company, "Black Bob" has endured searing attacks over the run down of the group's Scottish operations. The Ravenscraig works in Motherwell cast its last piece of steel last week.

But the group's losses, ex-pected to top £80 million during the year to end-March, cannot be blamed on Ravenscraig alone. British Steel has been squeezed by surplus capacity and weak prices, and analysts forecast deepening losses during the current year.

Yet Sir Robert's achievements should not be overlooked. He bequeaths his successor, Sir Alistair Frame, a company with a robust balance sheet. In addition, British Steel is now Europe's most efficient producer.

Seton sets high profit standards

SETON Healthcare has set a scorching pace since flotation in 1990. Placed at 130p, the shares raced to a 313p high this year, reflecting more than just euphoria in the healthcare sector. They closed at 283p on Friday.

Pre-tax profits for the 12 months to end-February, the first full year to include acquisitions since flotation, rose 60 per cent to £4.8 million, with a 15 per cent rise in earnings to 15.2p a share. Acquisitions have been particularly effective in the main healthcare division, which has proved resilient during the recession. Divisional operating profits rose from £3.3 million to £5 million, with operating margins up more than three percentage points to 16.4 per cent. Further margin enhancement is likely as newlyacquired products benefit from access to Seton's distribution channels. Sports and leisure saw profits fall to £563,000 (£701,000) on weak consumer demand but also reflecting the termination of a distribution agreement with Saucony running shoes. Sports medicine is considered ripe for development.

Gearing at year-end was 42 per cent, with borrowings of £6.5 million. Dominic Wilson. an analyst at Henry Cooke, Lumsden, expects debt to fall by £1 million in the second half, with interest cover exceeding nine times. He forecasts profits of £6.1 million pre-tax this year and E7.6 million next.

A high multiple of almost 16 times' earnings to end-February 1993 reflects the high regard for this company. In the short term the shares appear fully valued but may prove attractive if there is further weakness in the sector.

US fund wins case against 0 & Y

FROM PHILIP ROBINSON IN NEW YORK

TWO legal actions by one of America's largest pension funds could thwart hopes by Olympia & York Development, the Canary Wharf developer, of keeping it American operations out of the US bankruptcy courts. The Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association whose assets total $83 billion has successfully sued O&Y for a 1983 breach of contract on a loan agreement, is claiming $120 million in damages and has a second breach of loan agreement case pending. The New York Supreme Court has ruled that O&Y breached its agreement with the associ-ation over a $250 million loan to refinance the World Financial Centre in Manhattan. O & Y borrowed the money in 1984 from Manufacturers Hanover Bank on better terms. The association says the O&Y breach cost it $120 million. Damages have not yet been awarded. In its second suit, the association daims O&Y reneged on a $170 million loan agreement relating to the finance of a Boston development. That case, brought in the Federal District Court, has yet to be heard. O&Y said in a statement that the the association's claims for damages were grossly exaggerated.

Banking and property ex-perts believe that O&Y will find it impossible to restructure its $7 billion of US debts without filing for chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in America. O&Y has just raised $32 million from the sale of its stake in an investment company and says that with the sale, it has enough cash to last it until the autumn.

A restructuring plan for its American lenders details the attempted sale of many of its properties outside New York.

A COMMENT

Utilities suffer credibility gap

he gulf between what managers of privatised utilities report about their performance and the public's perception is assonishing. From telephones to water, the companies report hugely improved standards of service, on statistics set by consumer watchdogs, yet most of the public does not seem to notice and thinks privatisation has achieved little great higher private and has achieved little except higher prices. If these industries are to settle down and operate without constant political blight, they will need to work out whether the public is right after all or why their credibility gap is so wide.

Part of the answer undoubtedly lies in the immediate capital gains to shareholders and the sharply rising profits or dividends generally seen in the first years after privatisation. An illuminating study by City and Corporate Counsel interviewed 30 senior managers and polled 1,000 consumers to test the ground. Since this is a public relations company, it is naturally interested in the perceived need for better communications, but the findings are no less revealing for that. Not surprisingly, the managers thought privatisation had produced a pretty good deal for consumers and those employees who had kept their jobs. Less predictably, even they thought shareholders had fared much the best.

Consumers were not as damning in their criticisms as Opposition and media critics might suppose, but only half found anything positive to say about the results of privatisation, a third of these seeing better service. Nearly two thirds focused on negative effects, with 28 per cent citing price increases. There is still a strong populist view that higher profits must be at the expense of customers, whereas enormous cost savings have been achieved. BT alone is in the middle of a programme that could cut eventually cut up to £1 billion of costs a year.

The public is not being entirely illogical. Half the point of water privatisation was to make customers pay through higher prices for essential capital spending that had been put off in the public sector. Electricity prices were adjusted for privatisation, to raise rates of return and encourage competition. In 1990-1, price limits geared to the retail prices index, which was swelled above industrial costs by mortgage interest, brought windfall profits. As one chief executive admitted, some of the first companies to face the switch to the private sector reacted initially by becoming money-grubbing, only later realising they had to satisfy consumers whose expectations had suddenly and rightly been raised. Companies such as British Gas, that were successful in the public sector, were slow to make the cultural change away from being supply-led to focusing on customers.

uch early mistakes linger in people's minds, as did the political unpopularity of the water sale. This is not the full explanation. For instance, while BT correctly scored best with the public on improved service, it was also seen as the worst offender on price, which is the reverse of reality. Real prices have fallen. Water companies are slated for shortages when there are far fewer hosepipe bans.

Part of the answer lies in the managers' own misconceptions. During privatisation, they were much exercised by the need to satisfy City investors. This turned out to be easier than they expected. Meanwhile, many badly underestimated the impact of regulators interfering with their detailed decisionmaking and found, to their surprise, that they had not escaped the attentions of whole departments of civil servants who continued to shadow them, for ever seeking to tinker with structures fixed at privatisation.

The public wants regulation and therefore sees regulators as protecting them from the companies. The managers see regulators as making their own rules. As one utility's chief noted, customers are now "owned" by the regulators and the companies have to win them back. Another claims that as genuine competition increases, its regulator is becoming more intrusive rather than standing back. The managers have been through an education process. Politicians need to do the same if utilities are not to become as stifled as they were in the state's maw.

AN ECCHEMIC NEW.

EC should look west for direction on single market's next course

NORTH AMERICA, LAND OF THE FISCALLY FREE

The North American experience proves that subsidiarity and federalism are two sides of the same coin, writes Anatole Kaletsky

REFUSAL to learn from the rest of the world is one of the clearest signs of decadence in any nation. Such selfobsession was all too evident in President Reagan's America in the early 1980s, as well as Britain in the 1970s, when many Labour leaders opposed EC membership because it would stop them creating a socialist paradise here. Today, this kind of solipsism is running rampant in Europe. The clearest evidence lies in the great debate over federalism versus subsidiarity that led to yet another embarrassing deadlock be-tween John Major and Jacques Delors at the Lisbon summit.

Last week, instead of going to Lisbon, I spent some time in New York, Colorado and Quebec, where I gave a speech about the future of Europe to the Investment Dealers Association of Canada. The trip recalled to mind a question that had been puzzling me since I returned to Britain from America two years ago. In all the sound and fury about preserving national sovereignty against the encroaching power of Brussels, why does nobody look at the US and Canada, which have been striking a balance between federalism and subsidiarity for 200 years?

A glance across the Atlantic would quickly show that subsidiarity and federalism are two sides of the same coin. Both are enshrined quite clearly in the United States Constitution, as the Supreme Court emphasised again last week. Not only did its much-publicised judgment on smoking involve the tension between state product liability laws and federal health warnings, but also, much more clearly, the court struck down a federal environmental statute that tried to impose responsibilities on state governments for clearing up nuclear waste. This judgment underlined a point familiar to anyone who knows America: even after two centu-ries of federalism, the 50 American states and the ten provinces of Canada sometimes enjoy far greater internal autonomy than 12 member countries in the EC.

The North American practice of keeping power as close as possible to economics as in education and law. In fiscal policy, for example, the Canadian provinces are totally independent of the federal government, running budget deficits that are limited only by the providence of their politicians and the willingness of investors to accept credit risks. In the US, most states have constitutions requiring balanced budgets, but the definition of balance generally exciudes capital spending. Thus state and local borrowing for capital projects has grown steadily, roughly in line with gross domestic product, unrestricted by an all-powerful central treasury, as in Britain, nor by a treaty obligation, as under Mass-tricht. As in Canada, the scale of local borrowing is ultimately determined by local electors and credit markets. Voters are often consulted on bond issues by referendum, and they are close enough to their local governments to recognise that borrowing today can lead to high taxes - and lower property values — tomorrow. America shows that the degree of fiscal convergence demanded by the Maastricht Treaty is unnecessary for a successful currency union. It also shows that the 60 per cent ratio of public debt to GDP proposed at Maastricht has rarely been achieved (see chart). But American experience also suggests that a sensible macroeconomic policy after EMU will require a big layer of pan-European taxes and government expenditures, to create the automatic fiscal stabilisers that dampen the swings and roundabouts in a modern mixed economy. Unfortunately, as shown in a recent paper by Professor Charles Goodhart of the LSE, the Maastricht fiscal rules, which encourage national governments all to deflate or inflate at the same time, are virtually the opposite of those required to stabilise a monetary union.

In attitudes to microeconomic harmonisation, the contrast between American and European federalism is starker still. Since Brussels is committing its worst offences against national sovereignty not in the name of the Maastricht Treaty, but under the 1992 Single Market Programme, free-market opponents of Maastricht should take note. The campaign to keep as much power as possible at the national level could mean, first and foremost, a major unravelling of the 1992 programme. This would allow the French, Italian and Spanish governments to rig their domestic markets in favour of local businesses, a practice that is de-nounced and ridiculed by free-marketeers in Britain but taken for granted in Canada and the US. At the IDA conference in Canada, for example, Quebec's finance minister, in a speech lilting delightfully, as is the local custom, from English into casually that his government would favour bond underwriters with a strong business presence in his own province. He added proudly that Quebec's tax system was specially designed to attract foreign invest-ment and that its electricity tariffs were deliberately structured to give its industries a competitive edge. In Canada, it seems not to occur to anyone that blatant interventionism like this ought to be outlawed by the federal government in Ottawa. Americans would similarly laugh out of court the idea that creating a European single market requires uniform taxes, social and safety standards and financial regulations. Take harmonising VAT, an obsession in Brussels, where it is claimed that large differences in indirect taxes distort competition by encouraging shoppers to hop across borders and save tax. In America, not only do sales taxes vary from zero to about 10 per cent, depending on states and cities, but tax-avoidance by consumers is positively encouraged by the law. Anything bought by mail-order across state lines is totally exempt from sales tax. Thus someone who lives in New York and wants a $3.000 computer can save $250 simply by phoning a mail-order supplier two miles away in Jersey City. Such "unfair" competition has not wiped out retailers in New York. local legislators to stop raising sales taxes. Why then should Brussels impose a minimum VAT rate throughout Europe, or try to make

Britain abolish zero-rating? In laws on banking and insurance, health and safety, employment, takeovers and environmental protection. examples abound where the detailed harmonisation attempted by Brussels goes beyond anything dreamed of in America. In New Jersey, for example, self-service petrol stations are banned to preserve low-wage employment. Trade union and employment protection laws vary dramatically between the north and south. Texas protected its melon-growers for many years with health-related restrictions on imports from other states.

Of course, we Europeans can justly ridicule the inefficiency of the American banking system. We may want better employment rights and safety standards than in the American sunbelt. We may object to the selfserving state takeover protections designed to entrench corporate directors. The point is, however, that such issues can be judged on their own merits and left largely to national parliaments. They are not fatal impediments to a European market.

American experience suggests that only three conditions are really necessary for a single market to work: free movement of labour, of capital and of goods. It also shows that a single market does not require a library of detailed bureaucratic directives that try to anticipate every competitive eventuality. The US makes do with a general principle, the inter-state commerce clause of the Constitution: the federal Congress will "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes".

This broad statement of principle. combined with the authority of the Supreme Court to interpret and enforce the Constitution, has enabled American businesses to create a highly competitive single market. without detailed blueprints from

Admittedly, the American market is only a single market for goods. Many impediments still exist against the supply of services across state lines, ranging from banking and insurance to medicine and law. But as the service sector grows to dominate the American economy, so competition, backed up by the inter-state commerce clause, is leading, slowly but steadily, to the unification of the market for services. The process is not complete, but it is moving irresistibly in the right direction.

As Europe engages in its post-Maastricht soul-searching, a glance at America raises two questions. First, should Europe in one bound try to reach a purer free market than the Americans have created in 200 years? Second, should the remaining steps towards the single market be based on detailed executive directives or the interpretation of very broad principles by the courts?

The Americans have successfully struck a balance between economic federalism and subsidiarity on the basis of two general propositions: the inter-state commerce clause and the tenth amendment to the Constitution. This simply states that "powers the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". Since the powers delegated to the federal government are all laid out in Section 8 of the Constitution, a section just 434 words long (about a quarter of this article), there was plenty left for the states to do.

If Messrs Major and Delors want a working definition of subsidiarity that has withstood the test of time. preserved state autonomy, and created the greatest and most competitive single market the world has ever known, they know where to look.

introduced on September 30, looks set to bring out the sentimentalists in force. The current 10p coin — the florin as it was once called — is the last of the pre-decimalisation silver and is being replaced with a scaled-down version about the same size as the old 5p coin, phased out two years ago. The job of promoting public awareness and placating critics and pressure groups goes to Lesley Brend, a director of Shandwick Communications, the PR firm, who is advising the Treasury and the Royal Mint. Having done the same job in 1990, when the "tiddler" 5p was introduced, she is realistic about what to expect. #### Insurance Companies Act could easily be extended to incorporate private-sector pension funds

From Mr R Instone Sir, Dryden Gilling-Smith (article, June 24) wants a "single supervisory body with simple primary legislation and a lot of discretionary power".

I agree; and the simplest route would be to bring pri-vate-sector pension funds within the scope of the Insurance Companies Act 1982. Companies engaged in the grant of pension contracts or pension fund management are already subject to the Act, which could be extended to pension funds without affecting their legal constitution as trusts. This would have the following consequences:-1. The fund assets could only be devoted to activities related to the purposes of the fund

Pensions board lacks watchdog powers

From Sir Jeremy Rowe Sir, I agree with Drydan Gilling-Smith in much of his article "Wanted: a pension watchdog " (The Times, June 24). Where I believe he is mistaken is in his view that the Occupational Pensions Board (OPB) could not be the right body to supervise pension

The OPB's function at present is to administer the contracting-out requirements for occupational pensions — a much more limited role than that of a pensions watchdog. REPORTING THIS WEEK

GEC expected to raise profits

DESPITE poor industrial conditions and concerns over future levels of defence spending. General Electric, the diversified electronics giant headed by Lord Weinstock, is likely to report a relatively solid set of full-year results on Wednesday.

TIME CAN STATE

Orders and margins at GEC-Alsthorn, the Anglo-French power plants and rail equipment operation, should be developing strongly.

Analysts will be interested to hear how GEC plans to manage its exposure to the defence sector; the group is one of Britain's biggest defence contractors.

Despite the general eco-nomic malaise, final pre-tax profits are expected to climb to £820 million, against £818 million last time, according to Credit Lyonnais Laing. Mar-ket forecasts range from £815 million to £840 million.

After an unchanged interim dividend, analysts will be keeping a close eye on the final payout, which could be an indicator of GEC's confidence on its short-term prospects. Credit Lyonnais Laing expects earnings per share to edge up to 18.7p (18.6p) and a divi-dend of 9.55p (9.25p) is predicted, although some think the payout will be chaired by Sir Robert Scholey, is expected today to unveil sizeable full-year losses as the recessionary conditions continue to take their toll.

UBS Phillips & Drew has pencilled in a final pre-tax loss of £100 million, compared with a profit of £254 million last year. Market forecasts range from losses of £50 million to £200 million. A reduced dividend of 4.5p (8,75p) is predicted.

TOMORROW

South Western Electricity is expected by Nigel Hawkins. an analyst at Hoare Govett, to generate final pre-tax profits of £83 million, against £62.1 million last time. Market forecasts range from £82 million to £87 million. Mr Hawkins is looking for a dividend of 17.4p (15.2p). Ian Hilliker, at County

NatWest WoodMac, expects interim pre-tax profits at Lourho. the international trading conglomerate headed by Tiny Rowland, to slump by 72 per cent to £30 million

Market forecasts range from £25 million to £35 million. County is looking for earnings to slide to 1.8p (9.4p) a share, with a halved, but uncovered, interim dividend

Affair with Lady of Threadneedle St could end in tears

read a story recently about a desirable woman with considerable influence although French OAT yields are about 50 basis points lower than gilt yields, inflation there considerable influence over a young man. His infatuation, and her promises of a long and meaningful relationship, led him to devote himself to meeting her desires. The more gifts she received, the more she craved, until he was living beyond his means. Evenually, it was impossible for him to continue meeting her needs. Driven by rage, jealousy and disillusionment, he ended his life. One need not be a student of English literature to spot the parallels with the gilt market. The demands being placed on the poor investor by the (Old) Lady of Threadneedle Street grow ever more onerous, but still the price is paid and more stock is taken. The promises of tumbling yields echo round the market and incite further purchases of gilts. Despite warnings from some quarters that it may all end in tears when the strain of funding proves too much, the investor remains optimistic.

What, then, are the causes of the market's willingness to be-lieve in further yield falls? Two important reasons are the fav-ourable inflation outlook and the expectation that overseas investors will be persistent buyers of gilts, this year and next.

We expect headline inflation this time next year to be near 34 percent (about 412 per cent excluding mortgages). Significant improvement is expected. in particular, in the stubborn inflation of the service sector.

Turther, we think underhing average earnings will fall to bis per cent over the next few months, as the March bonus payments drop out of the CSO's threemonth smoothing process. If these estimates prove correct. the gilt market will take heart, and yields can begin to fall

One should not, however, be tempted to buy so much that one becomes overweight in gilts. The comparison with other bonds is, in some cases, unfavourable. For example, is expected to undercut Britain's by a full percentage point over the next year. A comparative underper-formance by gilts is made all the more likely by the stiff funding programme in Britain — French bonds should not suffer from a similiar avalanche of supply. France, in contrast to Britain, is stepping up its privatisation programme and its budget deficit is in better shape. British investors would find it very difficult to compensate for any sustained absence by the overseas buyer. The pro-portion of fixed-interest secur-nies in domestic fund managers' portfolios has fallen steadily over the past decade. However, we can hardly expect them to be prepared to turn around their portfolios so quickly to accept a substantial majority of the stock offered by the Pank of England over the the Bank of England over the next few years. The gilt market is probably reliant on overseas investors and international portfolios for more than a third of net gilt purchases in nvestors should appreciate the risk to gilts if the lessening in inflationary pressures does not happen, or if overseas investors stay away. Then, there may come a stage when domestic fund manag-ers will be so full of sterling debt they will resist increasing holdings further. At this point more large sales of gilts may only be possible if there are much better incentives to switch out of cash, for example, an upward sloping yield

Our advice to those still Our advice to those still smitten with the gilt market is to prepare to clope with less demanding bond markets, such as France, if things do not turn out as planned. Those able to corpora the Old Ladve. able to escape the Old Lady's spell may, in the longer run, live more happily ever after.

THE Bank of England is expected to utilise the gilt marker's new-found strength this week by stepping up the government's huge funding programme. Brokers were forecasting on Friday that the bank may be seriously considering issuing further tranches of longer-dated stocks follow-ing the success of last week's biggest-ever issue, the £2.75 billion of Treasury nine per cent 2012A stock. It was more than 60 per cent oversub-scribed, which brokers said clearly reflected the underlying strength of the bond

As a shrewd businessman, we don't need to ask you what features you look for in a colour printer. We know you want as many as possible. And at a breakthrough price.

You'll certainly want HP LaserJet compatibility with highest quality 300dpi colour capability. That's why you'll find HP's new PaintJet XL300 particularly impressive. In fact, it's so advanced that the HP PaintJet XL300 automatically switches between HP PCL5, HP-GL/2 and Postscript Level 2 languages.

Suitable for almost any environment, CAD, DOS, Windows, UNIX, and Apple, via its automatic hardware interface switching. It can also take A3 and A4 plain paper and even directly connect to most networks for laser quality text and colour anywhere.

And there's more. With the HP PaintJet XL300 Pantone® certification and colour matching capabilities, what you see on the screen is what you get on the page when it's printed. That means 16 million shades of dazzling colour to sharpen up all your documents and presentations.

The HP PaintJet XL300 - capability, compatibility and versatility all rolled into one. Ideal for the businessman who wants everything. To find out more ring our Customer Information Service on 0344 369222.

FROM DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT IN HAMILTON

POOR Stuart Barnes was inconsolable after England B were beaten for the first time this year at Rugby Park here yesterday. Victory was within his team's grasp but the Bath stand-off half suffered a goalkicker's nightmare as he missed eight attempts at goal in the first of the two "internationals" of the tour.

England can point to four tries against New Zealand's two but they know that the opportunities they rejected will not come again. Rubbing salt in the wound is the knowledge that Victor Ubogu's tour is surely over after a stamp on the head sent him to hospital after only four minutes with an ear lacerated to the cartilage, a wound requiring ten stitches and immediate cos-

Ubogu was in no doubt that the kick was intentional and the England forwards believed that Chris Tregaskis, the Wellington lock, was responsible, as he was for trampling so severely on Clarke's back that the No.8's jersey was left in tatters. In neither case did the touch judge, Hugh Chisholm, intervene.

That, though, was not why England lost by two goals, two penalty goals and two dropped goals to a goal and three tries. They failed to score the points their positional play suggested they should in the first 50 minutes and they made too many unforced errors. The longer the game went on the better the New Zealand XV forwards became and they were able, through their back row, to mount such pressure on Barnes that the England captain had one of his most indifferent days.

Three of England's tries were genuinely conceived scores: the fourth, an interception by Underwood in the final minute, answered a similar try by Tagaloa as England, attacking with desperate zeal from tapped penalties, lobbed a pass into his bands. The passer was the unhappy Barnes. Both the penalties that Cooper kicked were avoidable, as were both the dropped goals, the one after a free kick against the England front row for going down too early, the other after a missed touch.

Adding to self-inflicted wounds was the penalty that terminated an intense five minutes of pressure early in the second half, when England packed down for five fivemetre scrums and came away pointless. Warren Gatland, New Zealand's captain, con-ceded that failure then was the psychological turning point after England had reached the interval 8-6 to the good.

By that time Barnes had missed four penalties, two conversions (two kicks hit the was as though there was a force field round the posts," he said. "I didn't kick badly. I just missed everything."

It was a daunting start for

New Zealand; the tannoy blared out "Advance Australia Fair" as a preliminary and within three minutes Hunter had broken two tackles to cross for a try. Quick scrum ball gave Clarke the chance to work a set-piece move admirably with Hopley, and there was a message there for England about moving quick ball to the backs which, for much of the game, they ignored.

Nobody did more to bring New Zealand into the game than Gordon, the local player, and Allen, both at lineout and in the loose. Taylor, too, prospered until Bayfield moved back to mark him but it was deep into the third quarter before Cooper's first dropped goal gave New Zealand the lead, while their domination earned Crabb his try.

Even then, England responded from one of the few moves which gave them a sequence of possession. Dawe charged from the front of a lineout, the ruck was won and de Glanville streamed into space before launching Hunter at the line. Even when Cooper dropped his second goal, a beauty from the touchline, better control by England might have brought a reward. But control of the ball has not been a feature of England's play and only rarely yesterday goals on Friday night. Unlike the previous meeting, it was Britain this time who had to fight back. Ten minutes before the end, Potter's save on the line prevented Spain from going 4-2 ahead. Rowlands, in goal, had earlier made several fine saves to avert further trouble.

The Spaniards tested the British defence with their and at one stage seemed to be running away with the match. But, in the end, Britain looked the more likely to score.

Britain started well, with Kerly sending Batchelor on his way to score in the eighth minute. But Spain's in-form player, Iglesias, equalised four minutes later. Two minutes before half-time, a slip in the British defence left Rowlands stranded and Iglesias gave Spain the lead, which they held until the 55th minute, when Hill converted a short corner for his tenth goal in 12 matches since his recall to the

St Jovite takes emphatic Derby revenge

From Michael Seely IN DUBLIN

PACEMAKING tactics planned and executed by Jim Bolger and Christy Roche in yesterday's Budweiser Irish Derby resulted in the sensa-tional defeat of Dr Devious as the 5-4 on favourite trailed in 12 lengths adrift of his Epsom victim, St Jovite.

The blistering gallop on the fast going resulted in a track record of 2min 25.6sec, nearly three seconds inside Princess Pati's 1984 Irish Oaks time. St Jovite was the first Irish-trained winner of their Derby since Law Society in 1985 and 12 lengths the widest winning distance since the race became the Sweeps Derby in 1966. Roche, aged 42 and five times Irish champion jockey. was lucky to have been in the saddle after the hearing against his 15-day ban for improper riding had been put forward to July 6. --- The trainer-then explained in magnificent condition be-forehand and reflected the highest credit on the champion Irish trainer. "He hadn't quite come to himself at Epsom, but he was cherry ripe today," Bolger said. "I was a little surprised by the distance of 12 lengths. I would have settled for six. The plan is now to go for the King George VI and Queen Eliza-beth Diamond Stakes. We wouldn't think about the possibility of the Arc until after

In response to persistent questioning, Bolger also made it plain where he stood over his oft repeated statement that he would not have run St Jovite if Roche had not been allowed to

"Mrs Kraft Payson and I have felt all along that we wouldn't have wanted to have run without Christy. He's recoverible for 50 per He's recoverible for 50 per He's responsible for 50 per cent of the training and 50 per cent of the tactics as well." Ladbrokes have installed St

Jovite at 5-4 on for the King George and then go 5-2 Saddlers' Hall and 8-1 bar. However, brilliant horse that yesterday's winner undoubtedly is. Dr Devious was dearly a shadow of the horse that was always travelling so easily before his Epsom Derby win. The fact that yesterday's runner-up finished only a length in front of Contested Bid, the French Derby third, tells its own tale. Well, the man who runs Irish racing has won the Irish Derby," said Peter Chapple-

Hyam resignedly. "John Reid said that Dr Devious ran a bit flat. Some of my horses have not been right and maybe he was affected. But we'll give him a rest and we'll be back to try and reverse this form."

Reid commented: "We were a bit messed about by the pacemakers. But there are no excuses. When we went after St Jovite, he just lengthened his stride and kept on galloping."

Bolger and Roche were in invincible form throughout the afternoon, the pair landing a five-timer by also winning with Perfect Imposter. Ivory Frontier, Arrikala and

Dilum lifts Longchamp prize

From Our French Racing Correspondent in Paris

DILUM put up a fine performance at Longchamp on Saturday when winning the Prix de la Porte Maillot by four lengths from Lion Cavern, the odds-on favourite, with Bog Trotter half a length away third.

Fahd Salman's colt, partnered by Alan Munro, took up the running from the pace-setting Bog Trotter two furlongs out and strode clear in style to land the £20.555 prize at odds of just over 10-1. Lion Cavern finished well to deprive Bog Trotter of the runner-up spot, Steve Cauthen saying that his mount would have preferred more cut in the ground. Plans to run Lion Cavern in the July Cup are Eventually, the placings were allowed to stand, but the senior steward's secretary renow on hold. Dilum was the highlight of ported that it had been "a an excellent day for Paul Cole,

ROWING

By MIKE ROSEWELL ROWING CORRESPONDENT

THE British and German lightweight eights, less than two seconds apart in second and third places at Lucerne a fortnight ago, were both "se-lected" by the stewards at the Henley draw on Saturday and could meet again in the final of the Grand eights. The British crew of London and Nottingham County members has the tougher passage, with the London University and Trident, the South African Olympic eight, on its side of the draw.

The London students must fancy their chances against the South Africans after beating them by eight seconds at Essen. Overseas participation in the final is assured, with the Germans and two American crews, Penn and Dartmouth. drawn together.

Leander's Grand eight, which has experienced friction between its pure Leander and former Oxford University personnel, was withdrawn so that its two halves could concentrate on the Prince Philip coxed fours and the Stewards coxless fours. In both events, the Leander crews have fascinating first-round draws.

In the Stewards, they will meet the British world champion lightweight four from Nottingham County and in the Prince Philip they face the Molesey-Reading University crew, including Jonny Hulls and James Cracknell, Olympic hopefuls earlier in the year.

to combat viral outbreak

THE equestrian events at the Barcelona Olympic Games are likely to go ahead even if a suspected outbreak of equine viral arteritus near the city is confirmed (Jenny MacArthur writes). An outbreak of the disease, which prompts abortion in mares, was reported yesterday.

Malcolm Wallace, the director-general of the British Equestrian Federation, said yesterday: "I have had no official confirmation of any outbreak yet but I expect to hear from our contact veterinary surgeon, Charles Frank, as soon as he has discussed the matter with the ministry of agriculture." Frank will meet representatives from the ministry in Newmarket today. If the outbreak is confirmed, measures will be drawn up to ensure that horses can travel safely to and from Spain without carrying the disease. The virus exists on the Continent but does not occur in the UK or Ireland. Wallace said: "If there is an

Determined to make up for lost time after a virus brought the yard to a standstill in the spring, the Cockerham trainer is represented at each of today's four meetings.

Berry sends out 11 runners in all and is taken to score with six of them: Margaret's Gift (2.15) at Pontefract, Tino Tere (4.30) and High Principles (5.00) at Wolverhampton), Chateau Nord (7.15) and Miss Parkes (8.45) at Hamilton, and Cranfield Comet (8.30) at Sheila's Secret can spring a surprise in the Extel Financial Systems Stakes.

Wally Carter has his Epsom string in excellent shape and Sheila's Secret will appreciate this less testing track and opposition after finishing sixth to Satank in the Windsor Castle Stakes at Royal Ascot where the Blue-

The consistent Big Easy can deservedly open his ac-count in the Piper Cham-pagne and Raffles Nightclub Graduation Stakes. Julie Cecil's Ela-Mana-

15.0 15.6 Walwyn celebrates move with double

PETER Walwyn sent out his first winners since his return to first base at Windsor House stables when Winter Lighming and Samurai Gold gave the trainer a 66½-1 double at Chepstow on Saturday.

Winter Lightning came with a late swoop to take the Swallow Handicap and then Samurai Gold battled on well to hold Pusey Street Boy in the Extra Levy Handicap.

"We moved in three weeks ago and Winter Lightning's win is especially timely as she goes up to the sales next month," Walwyn's assistant, Patrick MacEwan, said. "Samurai Gold deserves his win as he has been placed so often."

Kauntze confident in Kooyonga

MICHAEL Kauntze is confident that Kooyonga, demoted from first place in Ascot's Prince of Wales's Stakes, can become the first Irish-trained winner of the Coral Eclipse Stakes for eight years at Sandown on Saturday (Michael Seely writes).

The Japanese owned fouryear-old, the best of her sex to 5-2 favourite with the sponsors last week following her decisive performance at Ascot over ten furlongs, the same distance as Sandown's first important meeting of the generations.

"Although she's been in season, she's come on a lot for her Ascot race," Kauntze over a mile in Europe last said. "Psychologically she's in will keep the ride.

thought she'd won at Ascot. "Tactics are always a problem at Sandown. But Kooyonga will be the one with the group one pace. And I would think the problem would be to know how to ride to beat her." said Kauntze, who confirmed that Warren O'Connor. banned for six days at Ascot,

McEnroe's magic highlights six breathtaking days

BY ANDREW LONGMORE TENNIS CORRESPONDENT WIMBLEDON is the only grand slam tournament to keep the middle Sunday free for a day of rest and, whatever the unique emotions aroused last year, the tradition has rightly been restored this time.

After six days of hectic, intense competition, which frays tempers and addles minds, everyone needs a moment to reflect and prepare for what Goran Ivanisevic has called "a new tournament" this week

It has been a breathtaking first six days, marked by the brooding brilliance of John McEnroe and Pat Cash, punctuated by upsets and by unexpected triumphs for Britain's Jeremy Bates, and, according to IBM's statistics for The Times, dominated far less by services than 12 months ago.

By far the greatest surprise has been the defeat, on Samrday, of Jim Courier, the world No. 1 and top seed, by Andrei Olhovskiy, a Russian ranked 193, who had lost in the first round of his last five tournaments

Courier's enormous confidence, his unbeaten grand slam record this year and his 25 consecutive victories counted for nothing against an opponent whose mediocre pedigree belied an instinctive grasp of the geometry of lawn

The Russian took a set off Boris Becker last year, so the warning signs were there.

Courier was as gracious in defeat as he was stroppy in victory at the French Open earlier in the month. Though he would never admit it, there might even be a tinge of relief mixed with his champion's disappointment. No more questions about grand slams.

Because he will always be heavily involved in the French Open, Courier is going to be vulnerable at Wimbledon in the early rounds, just as Borg was. Asked what quality you needed to do the grand slam. Courier replied: "Luck." The luck not to come across an Olhovskiy playing out of his skin on vour least favourite surface.

er, the first top seed to be beaten by a qualifier in the open era, opens up tantalising possibilities for the most celebrated qualifier of them all. In 1977, in his first Wimbledon. McEnroe reached the semifinal as a qualifier and it would be a near twist to the tale if he could return to the last four again, 15 years on, in possibly his farewell year. Suddenly, Cash v McEnroe, which seemed at the time no more than an exhibition from the archives, a brilliant but irrelevant contest between two former champions vying for the right to be beaten by someone else, has been turned into something much more significant. The ease with which McEnroe swept aside David Wheaton, a semi-finalist here last year, to reach the fourth round prompted all sorts of improbable thoughts.

In his prime — and he is not far off that now — neither Olhovskiy, his opponent to-day, nor Guy Forget or the new national hero. Bates, potential quarter-final opposition, would hold any fears for him. Beyond that, who knows? Andre Agassi or Boris Becker, perhaps.

Becker apart, most of the really big cruisers - Michael Stich, Pete Sampras, Stefan Edberg and Goran Ivanisevic - have been floating menacingly through the bottom half of the draw. The defending champion has not been thoroughly convincing yet but then nor was he during the opening week last year.

He was desperately nervy for two sets against Amos Mansdorf and his contention that he is playing more conservatively this year is understandable but worrying. He must now throw caution to the wind again.

Graf: pushed hard

Interestingly, only eight seeds have survived to the last 16 in both men's and womcusations of predictability in the women's game. The week ended with Steffi Graf, of all people, being pushed to the limit by Marianne de Swardt, ranked 76.

Figures based on 30 showcourt matches - 15 men's, 15 women's - from the first three rounds do not reflect so well on the competitiveness of the women's game. While the average games per set in a men's match is 9.6 — between 6-3 and 6-4 — it is below 6-2 for the women, which makes a mockery of calls for a best-offive set format throughout the seven rounds of a grand slam.

Consideration, though, should be given to playing the semi-finals and finals over five sets. At its best, women's tennis is as subtle and colourful as the men's game; at its worst, it can be brutal and boring. It would be a merciful relief if some men's matches ended after two sets. Quantity does not guarantee quality.

Ivanisevic, the guardians of the International Tennis Federation should note that. thankfully, the service has been less of a force in men's singles so far this year.

Figures show there have been a quarter fewer aces. services have been broken more often and games have been better contested. That is partly a reflection of the courts. which are harder and of truer bounce than last year.

anced, with old warriors like Navratilova and McEnroe jousting with Monica Seles. Agassi and a host of new names — Olhovskiy, Naoko Sawamatsu, Yayuk Basuki and Christian Saceanu — to take the titles away from Stich and Graf.

It may be a new tournament this week but the crowns will remain on familiar heads come next weekend.

Boardman dispels the doubts

By Peter Bryan

THE doubts Chris Boardman had about successfully defending his national 50-miles title at Tiverton, Devon, yesterday were valid. He is finishing his preparation for the Olympic 4.000 metres track pursuit and his training is for speed rather than endurance.

But Boardman's tinge of pessimism was unnecessary. He kept the title on a day when all his rivals appeared to be going backwards, set a championship record of 1hr 43min 1sec and made mincemeat of the course record of 1hr 53min 47sec.

After Gethin Butler, his likeliest challenger, retired because of sickness at the halfway point. Boardman remained well clear.

His fellow Olympian, Matthew Illingworth, riding his first 50-miles trial, was in second place at ten miles, half a minute down, and remained there to the finish, 5min 24sec in arrears.

Boardman found it hard cycling into the wind on the final 20 miles, which took a riding time of 43min 43sec, compared with his opening 20 miles in 40min 45sec.

Throughout the trial Boardman's heart-rate, which is 42 at rest, was generally 175, but it dropped to 160 on the hard If dropped to 100 on the hard stretches into a head wind.

Eubank drops principles to take up rematch with Benn

FROM SRIKUMAR SEN, BOXING CORRESPONDENT, IN QUINTA DO LAGO

CHRIS Eubank, who has been floored only once in his 32-bout career, was brought to his knees once again on Saturday - not by Ron Essett, his opponent here, but by his own venality. After claiming that he would never defend his World Boxing Organisation super-middleweight title against Nigel Benn unless paid £1.6 million, he agreed to the bout for "far less".

Neither he nor his promot-er. Barry Hearn, would say how much he had accepted. "I'm negotiating with Benn and it won't be right to tell you what Chris is getting," Hearn said. But he did say that a split of £750,000 for Eubank and £250.000 for Benn would not be far out. If Benn accepts the bout, it will take place at Queen's Park Rangers' or Tottenham Hotspur's football ground on September 26.

The figures make a neat £1 million, but it will mean that far from getting his £1 million tax-paid. Eubank will end up with a mere £400,000, or even less after the tax man and others have taken their cut. It all adds up to a humiliating climbdown for Eubank. He further compromised his "principles" by admitting that the tabloids, a group for which he has no respect, had forced his hand. As a result of the public clamour for a rematch with Benn, they had orches-trated, his "manhood" had been questioned. He said: "I have reached a compromise because people have started to question my person who questions my manhood, that must be put right. The papers have swung the balance. Money becomes secondary when somebody is questioning someone's pride."

Whether or not he is successful in upholding his "man-hood" against Benn, his backing down will not have helped his image. Eubank has tried to lift himself above the "blood business" of boxing by presenting himself as a man of principle. He has said about the bout with Benn: "There is a principle here. I want to sell it for £1.6 million. If I don't get it. I promise you it [the bout] won't happen."

In an exclusive article in Boxing News he had said: "My price for the rematch is £1.6 million. If I don't get it. I'll throw in the title. It doesn't mean anything. I'll still be 31-0; I'll still be The Man: I'll start from the bottom again ... that's good for the soul."

Eubank: hand forced

With a little help from the glossier sections of the media, he was beginning to look like a man who could stick to his views and rise above common venality. Now he will be seen as little more than just another pugilist. He certainly looked ordinary against Essett-The judges gave him the bout by 10-2, 8-3, 7-3, but most ringsiders saw Eubank winning by no more than one or two rounds. His poor showing was not surprising. He never looks happy against boxers. Essett, a former Uni-ted States Golden Gloves champion, was slippery and clever and made Eubank look no more than a plodder. Had the American believed in him-self and approached the contest with greater vigour, he would have won.

No doubt, as a result of being unable to get to grips with Essett. Eubank is glad that he has not given up his title to chase others in the hands of more elusive champions. The bout with Benn will come as a relief to him. He is happiest when his opponents come to him, and that Benn will do. He has been looking for Eubank for 18 months and will welcome the champion's decision to give him another chance.

Bates changes punch line of the great British tennis joke

Pritish tennis. Tee-hee.
Losing Brits at Wimbledon. Giggle giggle

British tennis players have become as weary a subject for jokes as mothers-in-law. It even affects the players: "My God, if I'm No. 1, it's pretty bad, really." the always-magnificent Jo Durie once

Now, for the first time since 1982, we have a man in the last 16 of the singles, and a nation rises to salute The Man in the White Woolly: hurrah for Jeremy Bates. "He's got all the talent, but somehow it doesn't come through in matches." David Lloyd once said of him. Tee-hee again. British tennis has become so hoary a subject that no matter what you say about it, it always sounds like a joke. The idea that Bates is ranked 113 in the world is for some reason hilarious. This is unfair, but British tennis players must live with it. Bates's career prize-money to the end of last year was $607.545; a stat that ought to stop a sneer or two. Tennis is a very tough world: to survive in it for 12 years and to be 113th takes a bit of doing. Perhaps Stuart Pearce is the 113th best footballer in the world. Nobody sneers at that.

SIMON BARNES The problem is Wimbledon. of course. Britain has the world's most charismatic tennis tournament, so for a formight every year, everyone in Britain wonders why we do not have the world's most charismatic tennis players. To be a British tennis player is to live in the huge and pitch-black shadow of the Monster of SW19. In this country, tennis is a minor sport. The problem is that Wimbledon is a major occasion. Britain expects a player to match, not appreciating that it is mildly remarkable to have a player ranked as high as 113. Anyone who thinks Britain is a serious tennis nation should watch American children playing tennis. That is seriously seem embarrassed at how small they seem beside the Sacred Monster. And all British tennis players look like the mildly embarrassed children of the vicar. Bates looks like a goodnatured lad who has turned up to help out with the annual fête. Such a nice boy, a bit scruffy, a bit short on selfconfidence, but a really nice boy.

Lord knows where his bit of magic has come from these past few days. Perhaps his recent talk of retirement has helped, and brought something of a go-for-broke aspect to his game. He seems to be held together with chewing gum and glue, elastic ban-dages here, sticky-tape there: his body is falling apart. But not his game. He has been playing the best tennis of his

Being a Brit, he could not do it without a crisis of selfdoubt. When he was two sets up, and 3-0 up in the third, and in real danger of becoming the only man to reach the last 16 without dropping a set, he had a dreadful attack of vertigo. He looked down: his head swam, his knees went wobbly, his fingers locked into the handholds. and he could move neither up nor down. He dropped the Il British tennis players next two sets — but then succernly everything was all right again. He saved a succession of break points, and then took the match in style.

Bates has managed to handie it all with charm and diffidence, plus a little bewilderment. "I'm not the sort of person who jumps for joy. jumps the net and kisses 20 women," he said. Nor is there danger of him throwing his woolly to the crowd.

Gower stands alone against Pakistanis

By JOHN WOODCOCK

SOUTHAMPTON (second day of three: Pakistanis won toss): Hampshire, with eight second-innings wickets in hand, need 140 runs to avoid an innings defeat by the Pakistanis

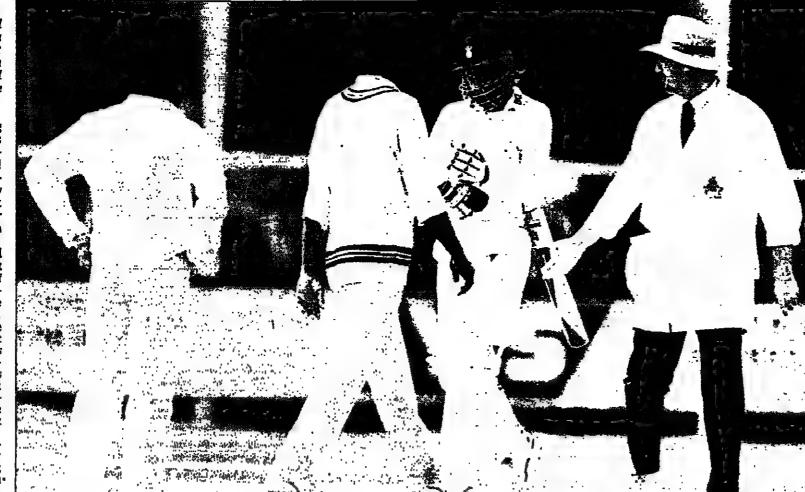

THE Pakistanis are giving another of the first-class counties a lesson or two. Having scored almost at will against Hampshire on Saturday, they made them follow on yesterday, taking their last seven first-innings wickers for 34 runs and bowling them out for 162.

The only reasonably good news from an English point of view was the batting of Gower. Against the same attack as he will meet in the Test match at Old Trafford, starting on Thursday, he made 55 in Hampshire's first innings, and although he was out more cheaply in the second, he gave the Pakistanis no reason for thinking that England will not be a stronger side for his return. He alone played Mushtaq's wrist spin with any composure.

I was sufficiently encouraged to recall the facility Gower showed when scoring 152 and 173 not out insuccessive Test matches in Pakistan in 1983-4 at a time when Abdul Qadir, Mushtaq's mentor, was every bit as good as Mushtaq is

If his stance is slightly more open than it was then, he plays the ball as late as ever and remains a good scotcher of the spin on the forward

Gooch, then, would have approved of Gower's play yesterday. Both technically and for the way he applied himself. He would have been more concerned about Smith's. Partly to give himself a chance to study the mysteries of Mushtaq from behind the arm, England's No. 4

Not out after all: Nicholas comes back to resume his innings after the umpires changed their mind over his dismissal had dropped down the order but it did not avail him. He might have learned more from discussing the problem with Gower over a glass of something after play.

But what had set people talking earlier on was an incident just before lunch, involving Mark Nicholas, the Hampshire captain. When he was 18 he was given out, caught at short-leg standing just in front of square, off Mushtaq. Before making his decision, Ray Tolchard (the Devonshire one), umpiring at the bowler's end, checked with Ken Palmer, standing at square leg, that the ball had carried. Nicholas, presumably of the opinion that it had not, persuaded the umpires to change their mind, to the understandable consternation of the Pakistanis and the mixed approval of the crowd. Whether Nicholas thought he was out or not is neither here nor there. He must know that the game is unsustainable unless the umpire's decision is accepted as being final. With the upbringing he had, it would have been the first thing he was taught. As the Pakistanis argued the toss - there was never any question of their withdrawing their appeal - I thought for a moment that they would walk

It was exactly the sort of incident which we grandly say happens on the sub-continent but never in England, let alone in first-class cricket. For all that, the comments of the Pakistan manager, Khalid Mahmood, seemed a trifle rich: "Is this the sort of behaviour you are going to tolerate from your players?" he asked. "Never in my life have I seen anything like it."

He also said: "Nicholas disputed it, and the umpires changed their minds. It was on his urging. Everyone likes to bat, especially if you are the Hampshire captain. He can bat four, five. six, seven times if he likes.

Nicholas's view was: "I was going, but the umpires stopped me. I'm dispirited that I've been involved in any form of controversy. The Pakistan management and I are happy now that the game will be continued to be played in the right spirit."

To the sound of the great Harry Altham, the patron saint of Hampshire cricket. turning in his grave, Nicholas scored another 12 runs before being given out a second time — to a tumbling catch in the same position off the same bowler. It had been a bad business, and by way of a last lament. Pakistan bowled only 88 overs in six-andthree-quarters hours' cricket.

Batting collapse dents Sussex's chance of trophy

By Alan Lee, cricket correspondent

WORCESTER (Worcestershire won toss): Worcestershire (4pts) beat Sussex by eight runs

THIS is the time of year when upwards of half the counties lose interest in the Sunday League. Worcestershire would effectively have been in this season's also-rans had they lost yesterday, which added to their ecstacy at a remarkable turnaround.

Sussex, lying third in the table after a run which has surprised everyone bar themselves, evidently had the game in safe keeping when, in the 37th over, they needed only 15 runs with half their wickets standing. On Sundays, however, things are never quite what they seem.

Somehow, Sussex contrived to lose five men for six runs in 17 balls, the last of them accounting for a bewildered captain, Alan Wells. whose composed 64 had apparently been decisive. For Sussex, it was a devastating blow to what had become a genuine chance of a trophy. For Worcestershire, it kept the season alive.

Wells would not have been sorry that Curtis chose to bat, as Sussex have won most of their games chasing. Nor would he have been sorry to see the Worcestershire captain occupy the entire innings making 77, facing half the balls but scoring significantly fewer than half the runs. The big crowd was unamused and their mood was darkened by three runouts, at least one of which could be laid at the door of the beleaguered Curtis. Easily the most influential was that of Hick, beaten by a fine throw from Lenham at long-off. having made his fifth Sunday fifty of the year with a fluency encouraging for England.

Hick had lifted a moribund early tempo, induced by a first spell of four overs for four runs from Stephenson, who generated a lizzing pace and beat Curtis with undermining frequency.

Leatherdale adopted Hick's role and busily made 29 from 30 balls but when he was taken at long-on off Salisbury. Worcestershire looked to Curtis to dominate the closing overs. This, he was unable to do. hitting only two fours in all and just one in the last 24 overs.

Sussex lost Greenfield in the third over and Speight in the 11th, both caught at point playing strokes they will regret. But Hall, who has a restless stance and a violent flourish of the bat while the bowler is approaching, played with sound sense for more than half the innings and Wells was massively confident.

Although Tolley brought a flutter of hope to a subdued crowd by removing Lenham and Stephenson, a curious but effective linnings from Moores restored Sussex's command.

Moores scored 24 out of a stand worth 42 in six overs. Sussex, who had needed a run a ball over the last third of the innings, were almost there when Moores was lbw. on the back foot to Newport. North and Pigott then played shots which smacked of panic and the 39th over was a wicket maiden from Newport, leaving ten needed from the last, a bridge too far even for Wells.

Essex go back to the top

BY IVO TENNANT

THE Britannic Assurance county champions are back beating Lancashire in two days, it cannot be said that they do not belong there. Essex's inexplicable loss of form earlier in the month can be put down to the kind of aberration that periodically affects their cricket. Ilford week is often an auspicious time for them, and so it was again.

Their formula is straightforward: make quick runs. take quick wickets. Having declared on 510 for two, they bowled out Lancashire twice, having claimed the extra half hour. As is their way, the wickets were shared around. There were seven for Childs on a dry pitch. He will be the key to their chances of retaining the championship if the drought continues all summer in the southeast.

Derbyshire, too, gained a victory in two days, beating Warwickshire by an innings. The pitch at Derby was, in marked contrast to that at Ilford, well grassed. Even without Malcolm, Derbyshire's fast bowling attack of Bishop, Cork and Base is ideally suited to such conditions. There was some dynamic baπing besides by Morris, who can take heart from the fact that his co-pilot in the Tiger Moth affair last year has been forgiven by England.

There was all but a victory in two days for Northamptonshire, who made Glamorgan follow on 323 runs behind. They need to take three more wickets this morning. This followed a large century by Bailey and another by Lamb that was as predictable as any century can be. He rarely makes anything less when his England place is in jeopardy. This time it was not enough to save him from being dropped from the Test side.

At Lord's, Emburey gained his one thousandth wicket for Middlesex, the county for whom he did not make his debut before the age of 20 and whose premier off-spinner. Titmus, was still an England cricketer in the mid-1970s. For Tufnell to achieve the same, he, too, will need to be banned from Test cricket during his career. There will be a run chase for Somerset this afternoon, one in which both present-day spinners doubtless will have a major

Martin makes the most of startling slip-up from Faldo

FROM MITCHELL PLATTS, GOLF CORRESPONDENT, IN PARIS

MIGUEL Martin, of Spain, won the French Open here yesterday as Nick Faldo astonishingly wilted under a hot sun at the Le Golf National. Faldo suffered the acute embarrassment of dropping five shots in his last five holes.

The British Ryde Cup play-er blamed officials for their failure to police photographers, journalists, television personnel and recorders. There should be only four players on the fairway - the two players and the two caddies - and the rest should be an arms' length from the ropes," Faldo said, "I brought this up at a Ryder Cup meeting and my proposal has not been adopted.

There were more than 100 moving about today and it wore me out. I was brain dead by the 17th and I thought 'so what, it's gone', and took three putts."

Faldo's demise opened the door for Martin, a professional since 1981, to win for the first time on the PGA European Tour. He scored 69 for a total of 276, eight under par, for which he earned £66,660.

Martin has had his share of misfortune in his ten years as a professional, although he was the first to admit that, on this occasion, he benefited from Faldo's benevolence. "I was lucky," he said. "I was petrified throughout and my putter saved me. I had 11

In fact, Martin is doing himself an injustice because he played the last five holes in 19 shots, one under par, whereas Faldo took 25.

Even so. Faldo should have won this championship in a canter. He held a two-stroke lead walking off the 13th green, where he had holed from nine feet following an authoritative approach. It was then that Faldo lost his way. He pulled his drive into the rough at the 14th and hit his next into a bunker, from where he fired over the green. He did well to get down in three for a six.

At the 15th, Faldo, using an iron this time, again pulled his tee-shot into calfdeep rough and had to come out sideways. He struck a glorious third shot over the water to eight feet, from where he missed.

Faldo had a chance of a two at the 16th but he missed from 18 feet. Martin, playing ahead, completed his round with a nine-iron to five feet for a birdie at the 18th. Faldo needed a birdle at one of the last two holes to force a playoff but he took three putts at the 17th, where he left his first attempt, from 32 feet, some seven feet short. Then the now subdued spectators watched almost in disbelief as Faldo took six at the last, where he almost skinned his recovery from a bunker into the water. "That

Munich: Laura Davies completed a timely victory when a closing round of 72 earned her a thirteenth tour title in the European Open championship at Beuerberg in Munich yesterday (a Special Correspondent writes).

Nilsmark, of Sweden. Sandrine Mendiburu, of France, shot 68 to finish third three strokes further behind. "My rhythm has been good all week and my putting touch has returned. My next two tournaments are big ones, the Hennessy Cup and the US Open. I am now looking forward to them," Davies said after her first win

Buckner still lines up with Britain's thinking athletes

By David Powell, Athletics correspondent

AS JACK Buckner explained so vividly in his book Running the Distance, there is an art to winning championship medals at 5,000 metres. In the big races of the late 1980s, he proved himself a better runner on the track than he looked on paper.

Faster men than he lined up for the 1986 European final but Buckner won.

A year later Gordon Pirie and Brendan Foster questioned his reluctance to force the pace in the world championship final. Had he got the best out of himself, they asked. "What a futile waste of effort it would have been to foolishly attempt to speed up the last mile and trail home a distant sixth." he wrote. "In deciding to follow a slow pace, I had salvaged a bronze medal. It had been an awkward tactical race, unsuited to my abilities, and yet I had still finished third.

Another year on and he was sixth in the Olympics, but five weeks lost training through injury had left him with a season's best of only 13min 24sec. "A heroic effort," was his assessment of his performance in Seoul.

So it was not surprising, after he had won the Olympic trial in Birmingham on Saturday, to hear Buckner talk of why nous will be as important as fitness when it comes to racing the Kenyans in Barcelong this summer.

One of the easiest things in this sport is to go out and run a fast time." Buckner said. "It is different when people start throwing in fast laps in the middle, and that is what I did today."

Buckner was pulled away from the pack by Anthony Kiprono and, when the Kenyan dropped out at 3,000 metres, he threw in laps of 61. 62 and 63 seconds to build an unassailable lead. Buckner, aged 30, drew particular satisfaction from his fast phase of the race.

"Somebody like Yobes Ondieki [the Kenyan world champion] is going to stick in a 61 or 62 in the middle," he

Buckner, now over his injuries, believes he has not been so fit since 1987. But fitness alone does not win medals. He will practise tactical strategies in the coming weeks, rehearsing for different ways in which the Olympic final may unfold, and he will use the environmental chamber at Loughborough University to prepare for the heat of Barcelons. One of Britain's thinking athletes - he has been an anti-drugs campaigner and served on the LAAF athletes' commission — Buckner will not be dismissed lightly by those who have run faster.

tres at the British Olympic trials on Saturday contained close to 40 athletes in each, which made the race for the first bend a lottery of legs. Jo Dering, who ran for Britain in the last world indoor championships, and Kim Bennett were down on all fours before getting into their stride. "I was probably not going to get an Olympic place, but someone who was could have gone down,'

Dering said. Precisely. There was provision in the schedule for standards races to remove those who had might have a chance of running into Olympic places, but they were cancelled. Peter Radford, the British Athletic Federation (BAF) vice-chairman, could not offer an explanation.

Off the track, things were not running as smoothly as Linford Christie was on it. Tessa Sanderson accused Andy Norman, the BAF promotions officer, of putting her event, the javelin, on before lunchtime. Sanderson felt that, as a former Olympic champion, she should have been given a more favourable time slot. "She is a 63-metre javelin thrower at the moment as well as being a 36year-old woman who won the Olympic Games eight years ago and we had current world stars of athletics out there."

Fulton resists calls for change

Brisbane: Bobby Fulton, the Australian coach, has refused to make panicky changes in his team for the third and deciding international match at Brisbane on Friday (Keith Macklin writes). There was a clamour for changes after Britain's splendid series-tying 33-10 victory at Melbourne, but, in effect, Fulton has dropped just one player, the stand-off half Peter Jackson.

Four changes are made. two of them positional because of the dropping of Jackson. The injured wing Rod Wisham is replaced by Willie Carne, the Brisbane flyer whom many thought would be chosen for the first two internationals.

Daley moves to what is regarded as his best position of stand-off half, with Fittler, of Penrith, taking his place at centre. The front-row forwards, Glenn Lazarus and David Gillespie, switch roles. Lazarus starting the game

De Ferran battles to the end

OSVALDO Negri, of Brazil, yesterday became the sixth driver this year to win a race in the British Formula Three championship (Stephen Slater writes), Negri led from the start at Snetterton, Norfolk, but on the final lap, Mikke van Hool made a desperate lunge for third place and clashed with Gil de Ferran, the championship leader. Van Hool's front wheel just missed the Brazilian's helmet and hit the car's front suspension.

Van Hool spun into retirement and de Ferran limped on to claim lifth position before the car's suspension broke as mechanics were moving it into its garage.

Trophy requires low scoring

By Patricia Davies

SCORING that matched the scorching conditions ensured that Great Britain and Ireland retained the St Andrews Trophy, defeating the Continent of Europe by 14 points to ten at Royal Cinque Ports. Deal, on Saturday.

George Macgregor, captain of the winning team, said he had never seen better sustained scoring. The adage of par being good enough to win most matches took a hammering, as illustrated by Ian Garburt. Having lost a ball at the first hole and taken a double-bogey six, he was six under par for the remaining ló holes of his match against Massimo Scarpa but lost by 2 and 1.

Los Locos trounce Guardacre

By JOHN WATSON

THE challenge for the

of these two squads' ultimate league march, in which the tally had been 14-3 to Los Locos. By general opinion. Guardacre deliberately allowed Los Locos to win that encounter by such a wide margin in order to avoid play-

RICHARD Davis had the unenviable task of succeeding Derek Underwood as Kent's left-arm spinner. He has had. it might be said, mixed fortunes in so doing. In years to come, Wisden will recall him as a more effective bowler in one-day cricket than in the first-class game. Yet twice this month he has taken career-best figures, his seven for 64 yesterday against Durham exceeding his analysis in returning seven against Gloucestershire ten days ago. Whether this will be sufficent to win the match for Kent is quite another matter. Durham declared 63 behind in the hope, no doubt, of being left something today. and had three Kent batsmen out by the close. For them, there was an ebullient innings of 90 from Larkins, 76 Hutton .:nd an unbeaten by Hutton in 72 by Parker.

In the Sunday League, there is no separating Essex and Middlesex, who continue to lead the table jointly. What may well prove decisive is that Middlesex have two matches in hand. At Illord. Gooch struck 79, his best score of the season in the 40over game, putting on 130 in 23 overs for the first wicket with Prichard. In the course of his innings he reached 7,000 runs in this competition.

What with that and an unbeaten 61 by Waugh. Essex saw off Lancashire by seven wickets. There was altogether little for DeFreitas to relish in his first bowl since Pakistan's first innings in the second Test more than a week ago. He had a conisone injection in his troublesome groin strain and bowled his eight overs in two spells at a cost of 56 runs. He did at least take the wicket of the England captain: he could have come up with no better way of proving his fitness.

His 68 was his first league half-century this season and included ten fours. Somerset were given a promising platform by Hayhurst and Lathwell, who fell to good catches by Roseberry at deep midwicket and short extra cover. Emburey deceived Tavare through the air and had him stumped and Somerset were 121 for four when Harden was out in the 27th over.

Harden hit aggressively be-fore he lifted a catch to midwicket. Rose swatted Emburey for six into the pavilion and next ball was caught on the leg-side. Somerset needed 91 from the last ten overs, but Weekes took three wickets in ten balls to finish with four for 37, his best Sunday figures. Middlesex won with 14 balls to

Bates thrives on burden of British expectancy

By Andrew Longmore Tennis correspondent

FOR once, in a long career spent carrying the banner for British tennis. Jeremy Bates can step on to the centre court at Wimbledon today free from the fear of failure. At the age of 30, he has more than fulfilled the expectations of the nation in becoming the first British player to reach the last 16 since Buster Mottram in 1982: defeat by the No. 9 seed, Gny Forget, would be a disappointment but no disgrace.

Not that Bates himself will view his greatest challenge in such cavalier manner. He spent an hour yesterday practising, shaking the lethargy from his body after his sapping five-set victory over Thierry Champion on Saturday. "I feel much better than I thought I would," he said, as he held court in the garden of his home a mile from the centre court.

Had he lost to Champion in the third round after leading by two sets and 3-0, his victories earlier in the week over the No. 7 seed, Michael Chang, and Javier Sanchez would have been overshadowed by just another gallant defeat. But Bates scraped through in the fifth set, proving that he is not as devoid of determination as his persistent critics might think and justifying his decision earlier this year to concentrate fully on reviving his fading singles

"I decided that if I was going to play for three or four more years, I would need to be totally committed. I was my own worst enemy six or seven years ago. I used to get upset, but the difference is that I have a greater understanding of what I want from life. I just want to enjoy my tennis now," he said.

British success is such a rare event at Wimbledon that the traditional gentility of the centre court crowd is bound to be shed. Indeed, win or lose, by the end of the day Bates, who is playing his first singles match on centre court, will have some understanding of what Forget went through in the Davis Cupfinal in Lyons late last year. The result might well depend on whether Bates thrives on the attention, as Forget did, or wilts beneath it.

"The crowd really gave me a lift against Champion. Every time I got up for a changeover, they cheered. Normally, I am in it for myself, but if I can do it for my country it would be great as well," Bates said yesterday. It will also depend on the ferocity of the French left-hander's serve.

Bates knows Forget's game well enough, as much through doubles as singles. He has already lost to the Frenchman in doubles here and has played him twice in the Davis Cup in the past 18 months in doubles and singles. His one victory came four years ago in the opening round of the Benson and Hedges tournament at Wembley, but he led by a set and 5-3 in the tie-break in the Davis Cup-tie at Queen's two

"He has a big serve and the courts are getting quicker. We played against him in doubles and he served huge the whole match, but he's not a natural volleyer. I'll just give it everything. I have,"

Bates said."I can't try any harder and I can't give it anything else and everybody knows that. Everybody is behind me."

Forget is aware of the task facing him. "I think maybe Bates is a better player now, so I'm going to have to be careful," he said. "The crowd will be behind him and it is never easy to play the home favourite in this country."

Bates, his faithful sweater

washed and worn inside out, will open the programme at the start of the second week of the championships, preceding two centre-court regulars. Boris Becker and Martina Navratilova. The defending champions, Michael Stich and Steffi Graf, are relegated to court one for the day, along with Monica Seles, and the "standing room only signs" are sure to be out on court two long before the visits of John McEnroe, a potential quarter-final opponent for Bates, and Andre Agassi.

McEnroe will play Andrei Olhovskiy, who produced the shock of the first week in beating Jim Courier, the No. I seed, and Agassi meets another qualifier, Christian Saceanu.

Christie toppled as Regis surges to half-lap crown

JOHN Regis defeated Linford Christie for the first time this season when he won the Panasonic British Olympic 200 metres trial in Birmingham yesterday. Regis, the European champion, had to fight tooth and claw for a victory that reassured him he is on course for an Olympic athletics medal in Barcelona in August.

Regis came off the bend ahead. Christle got up to him as though he was going to pass, but the Belgrave Harrier resisted the challenge of the Thames Valley Harrier to win in 20.27sec. Christie followed in 20.29. "I have been high for quite some time knowing at the trials that Linford was going to put me under pressure," Regis said. "But nobody was going to come pass me today."

After winning an 800 metres silver medal at the world junior championships in 1988, Kevin McKay suffered three successive failures in attempts to secure places at senior international championships. There was no mistake yesterday as he timed his run to perfection to win the

There can be no controversy over 1,500 metres selection this time, as there was for the world charapionships last year and the last Olympics, in 1988. Four years ago, Sebastian Coe was not selected to try for a third successive Olympic title and, last year, seed Steve Cram was picked after finishing fourth in the trial while McKay, second, was left behind.

McKay's place is guaranteed as the trial winner and, in the absence of anyone behind him making a claim, Peter Elliott and Matthew Yates will get the other places, though they will be expected to prove their fitness after missing recent training. Elliott, aged 29, has said this will be his last Olympic 1,500 metres and McKay is ready to take up the baton. "I expect Matthew and I to dominate British 1,500 metres running until we bow out," he said.

There was no one to touch McKay yesterday. Tom Hanlon broke away early and led with 200 metres to go, at which point McKay sprang from the pack to pass Hanlon coming off the bend. He crossed the line in 3min 37.51 sec, and the next 1,500 metres runner. Simon Fairbrother, was fourth. Hanlon, who will run the Olympic steeplechase, and Rob Denmark, who will run the 5,000 metres in Barcelona, were second and third.

Hanlon will be joined in the steeplechase by Colin Walker and Tom Buckner, the brother of Jack, who on Saturday won the 5.000 metres trial.

Tom Buckner has improved by 16 seconds this season, his 8min 26.29sec yesterday giving him second place behind Walker (8:25.15). But Keith Cullen, aged 20, has improved even more than Buckner, by 20 seconds this season, with 8:31.72 for third yesterday.

One of the most difficult decisions that the selectors faced when they met last night was whether to pick Brendan Reilly or Geoff Parsons to accompany Dalton Grant and Steve Smith in the high jump. Smith won the trial with a British junior record of 2.31 metres and Grant, though behind Parsons, is a proven performer on the big occasion.

The selectors have to choose between Parsons, who cleared 2.25 metres yesterday but has not achieved the Olympic qualifying mark of 2.28 this year, or Reilly, who cleared only 2.20 yesterday but has a season's best of 2.30. The choice is also between the experience of Parsons, who has been to two Olympic Games, or Reilly, aged 19, who would benefit from the experience.

For Smith, the Olympics are not the single most important competition of the season. "My priorities are to win the world junior championship and reach the Olympic final." he said. But, first things first: the English schools championships are coming up and he wants to win there too. He has grown half an inch to 6ft 1 2 in this year. Would he want to grow more to help him over the bar? "I don't want to be 6ft

Gower's reformation passes the Gooch test

By Alan Lee. cricket correspondent

THIS time last year, David Gower was on the brink of retirement, having, in turn, driven those who run his country and county teams to exasperation. The question was not whether he would play Test cricket again but whether he would complete the season with Hampshire.

Everything has changed, not least the man himself. Gower, roused by need and circumstance as much as pride and passion, is this morning an England player once more, his career exhumed even as, with poignant irony, those of his two most enduring contemporaries and soulmates were laid to rest.

Almost lost amid the euphoria that greeted Gower's recall, for this week's third Test at Old Trafford, was the demise of Ian Botham and Allan Lamb. Both were dropped, the selectors pointedly declining to attribute Botham's omission to injury.

Ted Dexter, chairman of the panel, called him an "ageing tiger" and he might equally have applied the phrase to Lamb. But if Botham's exit was inevitable, and is probably terminal, Lamb might be thought unlucky to go when he remains in rich form for his county and made an unbeaten century only three Tests ago. The news sent him to his bed, complaining of flu but, even at 38, do not write him off yet. Effectively, Lamb has been at 38. do not write him off yet.

Effectively, Lamb has been sacrificed to prolong the investment in Graeme Hick. Hick's return of 284 runs from 15 Test innings will have some people fulminating over misplaced loyalty and it is a fact that Hick, even for his county, has lost that strutting confidence on which he thrived.

He has been demoted, the No. 3 spot going to a somewhat surprised Michael Atherton. who had expected a longer and more demanding rehabilitation. Hick will now play as the nominal all-rounder, barting at six and purveying his off spin, which Worcestershire so neglect, in what will otherwise be a limited four-man attack.

DeFreitas is considered so important that he has been named despite the deserioration of his long-term groin injury. He has seen a specialist and had a corrisone injection but he must prove his fitness in a one-day game for Lancashire's second team today.

Malcolm's fitness is not in serious doubt but, if both are discounted, Pringle and Munton would then play, having apparently been retained on the interesting theory that bowlers of their height — 6ft 5in in each case — have been punished less than most at Old Trafford

England's bowling is thin, alarmingly so, but the Gooch ethos has always been that you cannot win Test matches without putting a big score on the board. Hence, the emphasis is on strengthening the batting, bringing the beguiling prospect that, come Thursday, Manchester will belong to Gower.

Gooch's breakfast-time phone call to Gower was an ice-breaking exercise. As such, the captain carried it off

What he does know is that they are very different people and it is to the general good that Gooch is now evidently prepared to accept and accommodate the fact, having ignored Gower for 11 Tests and publicly confessed that he felt more comfortable for his absence.

Perhaps both will acknowledge their own shortcomings in the affair. Gooch counts Gower as his greatest manmanagement failing and he should certainly have done more to head off the conflict which drove such a wedge into a long-standing friendship that they barely spoke for

Gower, if he is honest, will admit there were times, on his fateful last tour of Australia, when his behaviour seemed deliberately perverse, and times since then when he has wallowed in self-pity.

Those days, thankfully, are gone. A settled home life and a forthcoming marriage have helped. So, paradoxically, has his abrupt dip in earnings and the sharp awareness that he has no guaranteed future outside the game. Suddenly, all things have not come so easy to him and, as he whimsically says, the mortgage and the bank manager can concentrate the mind wonderfully.

More than 700 runs this year, averaging 65, testifies to the stiffening of resolve and vindicates his return. While the nation celebrates, however, spare a thought for Mark Ramprakash, who finds himself usurped by both Gower and Atherton, despite scoring heavily and consistently.

Nicholas upsets Pakistanis

By Our Sports Staff

MARK Nicholas, the Hampshire captain, was at the centre of a controversy yesterday when he apparently refused to walk when given out for a bat-pad catch and was then reinstated during the match with the Pakistanis at Southampton

Southampton.

Khalid Mahmood, the Pakistan tour manager, accused Nicholas of influencing the umpires and said: "Of course my players are unhappy—there is not an iota of doubt about the catch. But Nicholas continued to remonstrate with both umpires as he made his way reluctantly across the square, and, after a conversation involving all three men, the batsman turned back to resume his linnings.

The Pakistanis were incredulous, with Mushtaq throwing the ball down in disgust. But, to their credit, the Pakistan team — when informed by the umpires of the reason for their change of decision — quickly got on with the game.

What you have to decide, by studying the two following consumer profiles, is which family truly deserves the title of Mr and Mrs Average Briton.

The first family wake up to breakfast of Special K, spreading Stork margarine on their bread and sipping Red Mountain coffee. While the baby — wearing Ultra T Disposable nappies — tucks into Farley baby food, the other children play with Teenage Mutant Hero Turtles.

Having brushed their teeth with Crest, their usual snack is Monster Munch or Discos washed down with Sprite and the favourite chocolate bar is a Bounty. The house is cleaned using Ajax and clothes are washed in Wisk. She dabs on Ysatis. His chosen fragrance is Rapport.

Elementary? You would need to know only a few of Britain's biggest brand names to realise that the second family are the personilication of the British consumer. Their shopping trolley is filled with the leading brands in every retail Shopping around for a definition of a brand is not as straightforward as standing in front of a supermarket shelf. Barry Cox, who describes himself as new business development director at the advertising agency Publicis, put it this way: "A brand is the summation of everything you come to understand about a product, the physical, the emotional, the rational and also the irrational. You build up a picture from impressions gained through. say, packaging and advertising. From these complex set of communications grow a set of values.

Those values represent the brand." As Mr Cox remarked, this was not a bad top-of-the-head definition for the middle of a balmy afternoon when his mind was on Wimbledon.

Brands are a relatively modern phenomenon which came about with mass production. Manufacturers needed to guarantee to us consumers that their product was always the "same". This serves two purposes — ensuring that a product not confused with a rival's and offering assurance of consistent know what satisfied our needs. Surely, though, manufacturers are robbing us of our free will, manipulating us into making regu-lar purchases? Everyone I spoke to in the industry was at pains to deny this, though they would, wouldn't they? However, several quoted instances of consumer resistance. ### A brief history of time for the Eurocrat

There was something in the reporting of Gillian Shephard's hard-won EC concession over working hours which reminded me irresistibly of other negotiations, long ago. The minister herself was circumspect in explaining her triumph, but her press allies cried "victory!" and "a major triumph over the Euro lawmakers!". Then there were mutterings from the Institute of Directors about it not being such a good deal after all, thin end of the wedge, won at a high price, etc. What it all reminded me of was school: small knots of triumphant tights with seams. Who says education is not a full preparation for life? Clearly in the years to come there Will be many a stimulating session of arguing ourselves out of compulsory Eurothings, and Britain will need me and Louella. Oh yes.

But the whole subject was won-derful saloon-bar stuff. Well, how many hours a week do you work? Do you get a minimum 11 hours rest ("Hah! Rest! cry the working mothers, in chorus) between shifts, and 35 hours uninterrupted weekends? Do you want them? See, everyone has an opinion, and nobody much agrees. A perfect

Eurosubject. For a start, think about 48 hours. the minimum which Britain was afraid of being bound to. It represents 9 to 5, six days a week. Or perhaps 8 to 6 every weekday, with a four o'clock finish on Fridays. It gets nowhere near City workahulic's 7,30 to 9pm, nor to the life of a publican with the new extended hours or a mothers' help expected to be available for babysiming at night and who often runs through 43 hours by Wednes-day lunchtime. On the other hand, since we have now agreed to maximum eight-hour night shifts, anyone aiming at a 48-hour week would have to do six nights on the trot, plus travel. Not much of a life, really. Whereas the City chap above, and perhaps even the publiWORKING LIFE plentiful enough to permit escape, we would probably all throw in the Eurosponge and reject any regula-tion at all. Because lives evolve and priorities shift, and what is outrageously inhumane for a struggling parent might be just perfect for a keen 22-year-old still enjoying that early love affair with learning a trade. Or for a singleminded careerist with few friends. Or, indeed, for a tigerish post-menopausal woman hurling herself back into the workplace with terrifying Thatcheresque zest.

I am happy to report that the EC recommendations make most of my past life retrospectively illegal. At school, if you count hockey practice as work (and I most certainly did) I worked a clear 56hour week. On local radio I worked seven days a week because the weekend was the only time they would let me stand around in damp fields with a microphone saying "Well, here I am at the site of today's re-enactment of the battle of Marston Moor, and here is Sid Anorak with his genuine leathern ale-mug, to tell us all about it. Sid. what's that exactly that you've got on your head?" Well, no. I wouldn't do it now if I could help it: but at that age I didn't want my statutory 35 hour weekly rest period because all I would have done was mooth around waiting for Monday. When they did clamp down on the hours I ended up so desperate I joined a badminton club, over which we shall draw a veil. As Miss Austen says, let other pens dwell on guilt and misery: nor would I poach upon Mr Diamond and Ms Truss.

in the single life. But the most bizarre shifts of all occurred in an experimental period in the early 1970s when producers on the Radio 4 Today programme worked - wait for it - a week consisting of two 22-hour shifts. You started on, say, Monday at noon, and worked clear through to 10.00 the next morning. Then you went to bed for a day or so, and came back on Thursday at noon to do the same trick. Officially you could go and lie down on a BBC bed for a while in the small hours. but if America or the Far East was busy, you didn't. And anyway.

This had the advantage that there were no unwieldy handover sessions from day to a night shift, passing of bucks. It also quite suited both rootless trainees like me, and foxy old stagers who were combining the job with running a farm or a secret PR agency or several wifelets. It had the disadvantage that after a bit, everyone went rather odd They had to give it up in the end. But I am not sorry to have done it. What is life about, if not trying all sorts of weird ways in which to lead it? I think Louella and I will have to go into Europe and sort their ideas out a bit.

There are, of course, at least four Gilbert E. Kaplans, First comes Kaplan the financial wizard: multi-millionaire founder, chairman and editor-in-chief of the magazine Institutional Investor.

Then there is Kaplan the conductor. who has suddenly widened his repertoire. For ten years he pursued a grand obsession, conducting only Mahler's Second Symphony. He even recorded it, selling 125,000 discs. Today, however, he presents a new Mahler interpretation to the world. This time it is not a whole symphony, just the celebrated Adagiento from the Fifth.

Kaplan the musicologist is the person who forced Kaplan the conductor to break his beautiful monogamy, He formed a curious conviction that every other conductor in the world had got the Adagieno wrong. They were performing it much too slowly.

Kaplan the art-collector and Magritte expert came into play at this point. The cover of his new recording of the Adagietto is sensuously graced with the enormous rose of Magritte's Le tombeau des lutteurs.

Which brings us back to Kaplan the financial wizard, a man rich enough to ensure that a pet project is carried out with lavish attention to quality and detail. For today his Kaplan Foundation is publishing a limited edition. 1,500 copies only, of Adagietto — a sumptuously printed facsimile of Mahler's autograph score and Alma Mahler's copy of it. It is accompanied by a compact disc of Kaplan's performance with the London Symphony Orchestra. and by a 112-page study that documents just about every known fact about the Adagietto, from its genesis to a discography (around 70 recordings to date) and even a list of the 20 ballets set to its music.

If lavish presentation and painstaking research could prove a point. Kapian would be home and dry. But does his argument stand up? After all. he is not questioning a few errant novices; he is accusing nearly every distinguished maestro since the war of following a "false tradition".

Kaplan maintains that Mahler and his earliest disciples. Bruno Walter and Willem Mengelberg, used to canter through the Adagietto in around eight minutes. On his own recording. Kaplan manages an Olympian 7'57' By contrast, the modern maestro dawdles indulgently.

Recordings by Tennstedt. Abbado, Maazel and Karajan take around 12 minutes. Haitink's version lasts an eternal 14. And in an emotion-charged live performance Bernstein had the capacity to elongate the movement well past a quarter of an hour. In other words, maintains Kaplan, some of them are taking the music at virtually half its "proper" speed. These are serious charges.

The question is, will anybody take them seriously? What Mahler meant by the instruction "sehr langsam" (very slow) is really the nub of the matter. "I came across the discovery by Mengelberg that Mahler had used the Adagietto as a love letter to Alma." maintains Kaplan. To Kaplan, this implies that the music should flow with passion and spirit, not drift into stagnant ethereality.

Kaplan identifies several reasons for the false feyness. Luchino Visconti's film of Death in Venice linked the Adagiento with a feeling of supine decay and death - in fact, Mahler's own death, since Visconti modelled his Aschenbach figure on the composer.

Bernstein also contributed to the funereal associations, by conducting the Adagietto at the requiem of Robert Kennedy. Other conductors may have felt that the Adagietto was simply too short to balance its mighty companion movements, if played at the pace Mahler seems to have intended.

For Kaplan, the matter is an ethical issue. He wants other conductors to cease their wilful distortions of Mahler's intentions, and has deliberately chosen a hugely expensive and high-profile way of making his point. "I guessed that, by bringing out the facsimile, the recording and the monograph all together. I would make a bigger impact than by writing an article in some scholarly journal." he

Other conductors can respond -- if they respond at all to Kaplan's challenge - by pointing out that Mahler himself, when conducting other composers' music (especially Beethoven) and Schumann), tampered extensively if he felt it did not sound right. Kaplan's own recording certainly has an urgent air about it; whether that captures the essence of a love letter is ultimately a matter of taste. Either way, this remarkable amateur has once more given music's haughty professionals something to chew over. · Adagietto is distributed in Britain by

The Dybbuk

NEXT month the RSC is staging what will presumably be a faithful translation of Solomon Anski's tale of the Hassidic scholar whose soul sets up a squat in the girl he was denied when he was alive. But by some bizarre coincidence, or inscrutable act of the theatrical gods, two other versions of The Dybbuk have already been seen in London this year, neither of them straightforward. January gave us Bruce Myers's adaptation, a twohander in which a Jewish husband and wife brightened a glum ritual supper by performing Anski for each other. Now June brings a still more intricate piece from the writer and director Julia Pascal: a play within a play within a ruminative monologue.

On comes a troubled-looking Kate Margam as Judith. a modern English Jew not unlike Pascal herself. She talks of journeying through a Germany

almost empty of living kith ("Hitler won") but full of kin cut off in their prime, ghosts or "dybbuks" asking her to give voice to their pain. This she proceeds to do by transforming herself and four other actors into ghetto dwellers, subsisting on what seem to be slices of rat in the catacombs of some unnamed city, probably Warsaw or Vilnius in 1942.

All are desperate and most as confused about their identity as Judith herself: "I'm only half-Jewish. my mother was pure Aryan." What follows is presumably meant to remind them. and us, that they have tales, traditions, beliefs in common. At any rate, they launch into Pascal's rough-theatre version of the most famous and resonant of all Yiddish plays: which is, of course. Anski's Dybbuk. This transition comes a bit late.

Pascal's production would have more dramatic impact if it established the miseries of the ghettos more succinctly and the point and purpose of The Dybbuk itself more fully. As it is, the ladders conveniently furnishing the wings of the Angel of Death, the sides of the scholar's coffin, the bridal canopy prepared for the girl her father has given to another man. Another member of Pascal's mostly excellent east. is in Anski. The posthumous reconciliation between the scholar and his love is missing. Instead, the offstage shouts and crackle of gunfire intensify, and, in the evening's most striking image, the actors walk again and again into the bullets, their faces variously scared. glazed, puzzled, dignified and defiant. Anski might have objected, since his play was meant to suggest that. however low we plunge, there is always hope of spiritual rehirth: "Within the fall the power lies to rise again." But then Anski wrote the play in 1917. before Hitler and the holocaust.

The writing is carnest, sincere and impassioned. What it lacks is the ability to characterise the onstage families as erful. The stories of atrocities emphasise the self-destructive nature of the war: shock, guilt, psychoindividuals: they remain mouthpieces somatic dumbness, suicide. The of attitudes in the style of a dramatised stylised presentation of fact is more telling than the fictional love affair and schools' broadcast, the over-explanatory peppered with emotional cliches. The final litany of anecdotes, with the its attendant tensions.

Gary Drabwell's production is happiest in non-realistic set-pieces accompanied, with astonishing success, by snatches of popular classics. The cast's patriotic sloganising to the Soldiers' Chorus from Faust, the sensationalist headlines from the partisan press gradually jumbled into frenzied shouts to Peer Gynt, and the cruption of violence to the strains of Prokofiev. from swaggering jeers to fisticulfs to firearms and a stage full of corpses these passages are almost choreo-graphically timed and paced. IAN RITCHTE's appointment as the new general director of Opera North may herald high excitement up in Leeds. The 39-year-old ad-ministrator has made his name, managing the Scottish Chamber Orchestra, by pro-moting strongly the music of living composers — and his innovative policy won the SCO the £100,000 Prudential Award for the Arts. At Opera North he will be in harness with Paul Daniel, the 34-year-old conductor appointed music director last year, and another champion of the new. Ritchie succeeds Nicholas Payne in September 1993, when Payne becomes director of the Royal Opera.

Alberto Negrin and Giuseppe Ferrara, whose producer was the his long and distinguished record of such neo-ductimentary pictures, was asked to direct a fourth project but refused, saying the events were too recent. Franco Zefirelli, meanwhile, has adopted the moral high ground, condemning the lot as "cannibals".

Radiant in a topsy-turvy world

Dame Wendy Hiller, Shaw's favourite actress, is still in magnificent form as she turns 80. Interview by Michael Arditti

Alice, the Screenplay being transmitted on BBC 2 on Wednesday, the eponymous Countess remarks that "I don't think I care very much for journalists". So convincing is Dame Wendy Hiller's performance in the role that I approached her with some trepidation. I need not have feared; she greeted me warmly in the Beaconsfield home she has shared for 51 years with her husband of five years ionger, the playwright Ronald Gow.
"As you can tell," she says, "I do not care for change.

In fact, Dame Wendy - who will be 80 in August - has seen much change in the course of a b0-year career that has tak-'Shaw flirted en her from overnight stardom as Sally Hardcastle with me in Walter Greendisgracefully. wood's Love on the Dole, through a Hollywood Oscar for Rattigan's Sep-I fell deeply in arate Tables, to love with him' countless leading roles in the West

Broadway. With her nonagenarian husband alertly confirming details - "I call myself Wendy's rememhrance" - she recalled its genesis.

There was no theatrical tradition in her middle-class Lancashire family, although, as children, she and her three brothers played charades. My brother Peter and I used to push my dolls in a pram around the garden and then do a terrible act of weeping over our dead babies. I don't know whether it was cathartic: it sounds unhealthy now."

Her parents supported her acting ambitions, although when Love on the Dole transferred to London her father would not hear of her living alone. "My poor mother had to come with me, as she did when I went to America. There I was, 22 years old, starring on Broadway and still chaperoned. New York reeled under the news. And when I married Ronald the following year. I did so from my father's house — but then, in a very real sense, I'd Ronald Gow had adapted Greenwood's novel. Initially, he had thought her too inexperienced to play Sally, but "there was no one else young enough who could do the accent". Her success meant that the one-week run was extended to an unprecedented three. "Then we

n Allan Cubitt's Countess were bought by the man who used to put on plays on Blackpool Pier. He took us on a seven-month tour of Lancashire and Yorkshire — towns which have since disappeared. We played, twice-nightly, to clogs and shawls; it was clogs and shawls

Despite wooing Broadway, she resisted the lure of Hollywood. "I was a beastly little snob and thought they were beneath me." A more congenial offer came from Sir Barry Jackson to play St Joan at the Malvern Festival to celebrate Shaw's 80th birthday. It was the start of a historic association which culminated in her screen portrayals of Eliza

jor Barbara, Not that their introduction was auspi-cious: "'What's the matter with your hair? GBS asked at rehearsal. 'It's positively imtered it down with bay rum and under the lights it had waved." She became devoted to him. "GBS wasn't like an old man. He was very upright: very elegant, beautifully groomed, very fresh-looking. He had sparkling blue eyes with a wicked look in them. He flirted with me disgracefully. I fell deeply in love with him. Looking back, if only I'd been a little less diffident ... He really did hold out the hand of friendship. He insisted I played Eliza; I didn't

Shaw's faith in her is amply confirmed. Her Eliza on screen has the same inner strength as her Countess Alice half a century later -a rosy-cheeked radiance evident even in black and white. "At that age, you take things so much for granted. It was just as though every girl had an offer from GBS. Thinking back, I don't know how I had the courage." She sighs, "That's one of the unkindest things nature does; it takes away your courage."

After the Shaw films, her screen career included Outcast of the Islands. Sons and Lovers, A Man For All Seasons and the Powell-Pressburger I Know Where I'm Going. "I admired Mr Pressburger and got on well with him; but Mr Powell and I had our differences. He was a dreadful bully." And she did finally make it to Hollywood "in rather a bad film about the Mau Man, with that lovely creature [Rock Hudson] who died of Aids".

As with all great actors, her true ome is the stage. However, apart from an indomitable Gunhild in the National's John Gabriel Borkman, her career has bypassed the subsidised theatre, something she regrets. Working in the great companies does give actors a cachet, lacking in someone like me."

n even larger cause for regret has been the absence of Shakespeare. She may have triumphed in Ibsen, Shaw, Hardy and Henry James, but except for a wartime Viola and a season with Richard Burton at the Old Vic, she missed out on the Bard.

Instead, for two years in the early Fifties, she starred opposite Edith Evans and Sybil Thorndike in N.C. Hunter's Waters of the Moon. giving her the chance to observe those two legendary ladies at first hand, "Dame Edith lived so much more for the theatre than she did for people; she gave her all in her art. Sybil was quite the opposite. She could never say no to anyone. She once told me 'I'm so glad when the curtain goes up; being on stage is

"Dame Edith held up rehearsals with endless discussions, which were a complete waste of time, because she had no intention of listening to the director. Once when Sybil and I went out for sausages and mash, she said to me 'Dear Edith finds rehearsal such a trying time and so she demands all this attention. I think Lewis (Casson, her husband) and I could be counted her oldest friends. Once you accept the fact that Edith isn't interested in anything unless it appertains to Edith, you

The bond between Dame Wendy and Dame Sybil was not only that between two of Shaw's favourite actresses, but two women whose sympathies extended far beyond the stage. Another great actress for whom she felt affection was the centenarian Gwen Ffrangçon-Davies, at whose memorial service she had read the day before we met. "Dear Gwen: I do miss her so. You know, she was only old the last few weeks. She said to me 'My darling, I'm full of grumbles and full of aches. Oh, my darling, I'm beginning to feel my age."

he question of age is one she has to face herself as she approaches her 80th birthday. Lately she has been dogged by ill-health. "I've had trouble with my leg, and five separate operations... I don't feel old: though I suppose I must be. The other day, a charming old gentleman in Waitrose offered to push my trolley. I thought 'I should be pushing yours.' Then I realised I'm just a little white-haired lady."

Like Countess Alice who asserts
"The past is dead and buried . . . it cannot be revisited," she tries not to live in the past, even though it often deplore it; why do people say change is progress? Ronald's answer was always: 'At least there's no longer child prostitution in the Haymarket'; now I'm not so sure. And I abhor the laxity of language. The other night I went to a play, which shall be nameless, and I thought, did John [ Gielgud ] live in vain?" The range of her work has ensured that there is a far fuller record of her performances than those of her more classical colleagues. "I'm very fortunate that when I go to America, young people know me because of my films being frequently shown. It's such a gift. Of course I wish I could have done more Shakespeare, but there have been compensations. I've been so blessed in my life" - she points to her husband - "and the greatest blessing is over there."

More than just a good friend

here is always the danger with Marevna that she may be remembered less for what she was than for whom she knew. I'mm birth in Kazan to death in Ealing, she led a highly coloured life, in constant confact with the great, of which she gave her own picturesque account in two volumes of autobiography. Even if people remembered that she was a painter of talent in her own right, the recollection was frequently ousted by glorified gossip about how she received her name (daughter of the sea) from Maxim Gorky and how she had a lengthy affair with Diego Rivera, father of her daughter Marika. The centenary of her birth would seem like a good time to concentrate attention on Mareyna herself. This, to a certain extent, the memorial show at Wildenstein does. But its title. Mareyna and Montparnasse, indicates that it is still as much about her circle as about her own work as an artist: It is a considerable inhute to her quality that she is not totally overwhelmed by the company she keeps. For Marevna, in her Paris years (1912-1942), was surrounded by some very dominant figures. As a Russian emigrée shegravitated naturally to Rusnan emigré circles in Paris, where she met Soutine. Upchitz, Zadkine, Kikoine and Kisling. This group moved in the same circles as Picasso, Modigliani, Matisse, Gris and indeed a virtual Who's Who of the Ecole de Paris at the time. Many of show, which includes portraits of Marevna by Picasso and Foujita as well as pictures by Marevna of many of them.

In Paris Marevna had an affair with Zadkine before being introduced to Rivera. At this time she was involved with Cubism, and her Cubist works, such as Deux Personnages Georgiens, speak the dialect of the tribe with an individual inflection. During her time with Rivera she adopted, rather bizarrely for the period, a form of Pointillisme, Rivera greatly disapproved, but she stuck to her guns, and her unique fusion of Cubism's segmentation of form with Pointillisme's division of colour continued to serve her for the nest of her long working life. It comes as a surprise, for instance, that the vivid and dynamic Danse Hassidique pendant les Fêtes de Hanoka was painted as late as 1970, when she was nearly 80. Marevna's stylistic development was consistent, right up to the last landscapes of Ealing back gardens (none of which appears in this show, unfortunately); but she reserved the right to go off in other directions if she felt like it: one such divagation is responsible for one of the most striking pictures on show, the extraordinary large Marika nue allongée which must date from the Forties and looks very like the work of Suzanne Valadon, Utrillo's mother.

The 44 works by Marevna included here, nearly all bor-rowed from the Musée du Petit Palais, Geneva, give a fair picture of her career. Throughout the exhibition, her paintings are interspersed with works by members of her circle, among them some very remarkable works by lesser known members of the group.

such as a couple of splendid Cubist pieces by Maria Blan-chard, the friend of Juan Gris, or the brilliant Fauve self portrait by Jeanne Hebuterne, the mistress of Modigliani. It is noticeable that Marevna, Blanchard and Hebuterne tend to be placed by their relationships with important males. It is also noticeable that, as they continue to stand on their own merits, such race and its coverage by the media, documentary makers can be relied on to round up the usual suspects. Alf Garnett is sure to show his face at some point. and you can expect to see the grainy news footage of Enoch Powell ranting away in that scholarly way of his. Add a leftwing sociologist or two, and a shot of Eighties riots, and you are already halfway home. The old demons were set loose once more on Saturday in Black and White in Colour, documentary which launched BBC 2's week-long season devoted to the portrayal of race on the screen, Isaac Julien's two-part survey, which will be concluded tomorrow night, made a diligent sweep through the archives, beginning with the cheerful carica tures who sang and danced their way onto the wedding cake sets at Alexandra Palace in the 1930s. The old footage was fascinating enough, without the help of talking heads. The image of Cy Grant strumming his guitar on Tonight is familiar enough, but how many people remember the episode of Emergency Ward 10 which it contained a scene of a white man kissing a black woman? There was an intriguing glimpse, too, of Fable, a BBC play from 1965 based on the notion of role-reversal, with whites as the despised minor ity and blacks as the paternalistic majority handing out advice and the odd pound note. The idea seems innocuous now, but at the time the piece was considered so dangerous that its transmission date was postponed because of

Then the subject is fears of a racist backlash in an East End by-election. Julien's thesis is that television has failed to reflect the reality of black and Asian life in this country. Taken together, the clips made compelling evidence for the prosecution: even well-meaning dramatists and film makers have tended to reduce black characters to stereotypes. Black actors and production staff have been woefully under-employed.

Where the programme went astray was in its script. Since it was a British Film Institute production, the film was stuffed full of BFI-speak; all the usual waffle about "discourse", "interventions" and "the social construction of race". Julien and his producer Colin MacCabe (the men responsible for that risible slice eager to condemn the television mandarins that they missed the nuances. Whatever their faults, the broadcasters at least tried to filter out the worst manifestations of British prejudice. In any case the film was, by and large, preaching to the convened. By now every BBC 2 viewer must be aware that racism is a Bad Thing. The real work is being done by the likes of Lenny Henry, a thoughtful entertainer who reaches a mass audience. His comedy show was far more subversive (to use a favourite BF1-ism) than anything Colin MacCabe will ever make for the art-house circuit.

Stepping out for the birds

reports on the campaign against the bureaucratic lunacy threatening sensitive wildlife habitats in Spain

he European Community is not Orwellian or even Kafkaesque. It is pure Jonathan Swift. Let us start with a small nonsense and a small bird: we shall move on to a colossal nonsense and an absolutely gigantic bird.

In central Spain, there are areas of poor soil and little rain, collectively known as the Spanish Steppes. They have been shaped by traditional agriculture; methods refined over the vears for sustained use of a profoundly unpromising place.

The area around the small town of Belchite is particularly tough, It supports little more than light grazing of sheep. The area is so parched the bare soil is covered in lichen and looks more like rock than good earth. It is home to a weird little bird called Dupont's lark, a sneaky character that creeps about in the scrub.

The EC came up with a scheme to help agriculture in the area. It would pay farmers to plough up the scrub and plant wheat. It would pay them 20,000 pesetas per hectare to do so. So far so good, but there are some points this scheme failed to take into

 The EC already has a surplus of You cannot grow commercially viable wheat in Belchite. A natural habitat was being destroyed by the EC in direct contravention of its own laws. The EC is bound by its own Wild Bird Directive, under which certain birds are protected. It is not only the birds themselves that are protected by law: it is also the places where they live.

The local farmers are not foolish enough to turn down free money. Naturally, they have ploughed up a good deal of land around Belchite. However, they have not wasted any time harvesting: there is nothing out there worth harvesting. In short, local farmers have been paid to mess about: paid to destroy.

Other steppes are suitable for cereal growing and these too have their characteristic birds. Now these areas are under a massive programme of intensification. The word here is irrigation: making the dry areas wet. lush and productive.

Again there are objections to this

 Large-scale irrigation is not sustainable as a long-term policy - the schemes will run out of water. being destroyed, again in contravention of EC rules.

 The Spanish farmers themselves are opposed to the schemes.

The matter is about to become an international cause célébre. Conservation organisations are girding their loins to take on Brussels, for this is now a test case. This week the International Council for Bird Preservation (ICBP) and the Sociedad Espanola de Omitologia (SEO) launch the Spanish Steppes Campaign, backed by most of the bird conservation bodies of Europe, including the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB).

In the front line: Spain's magnificent flocks of great bustards will be driven out unless conservationists and farmers can resist EC plans

Such campaigns need a striking and spectacular bird to act as a rallying point. There is no question about the flagship species of this campaign: it is as outrageous and as unforgettable as its name: the great Great bustards were once British birds, but they went extinct in the 19th century. Shooting and, ominously, changes in farming practices did for them here.

They are monsters, the size of turkeys, and they gather in flocks of up to 100. Their flight is strong and straight, with that incongruous grace that characterises oversized things such as carthorses and elephants. There are some great bustards in Spain, with an estimated 10,000 birds, has 65 per cent of the world population.

The other important birds of the steppes are little bustards and blackbeilied and pin-tailed sand-grouse. Not just to bird-watchers, but to anybody with eyes and ears, the steppes are special places. The steppes are a man-made environment. For generations farmers have alternated cereal-growing. grazing and fallow. The bustards and the sand-grouse have been ignored. and they have co-existed quite happily with the farmers. Now everything changing: hustard populations are threatened by irrigation because they are dry-country birds, eating grain and insects which would not exist in a ut this is not a traditional conservation versus agriculture story. The farmers are angry at the intensification that is being forced upon them. They have been told by the central Spanish government that massive irrigation schemes are "in the national interest". They are required to take out large bank loans to pay a share of the irrigation costs. The theory is that new, higher yields will make paying back simple. Farmers - in every society, an independent-minded

Manuel Martin Partearroyo, the president of ASAJA, an acronym which translates as Agrarian Association of Young Farmers, says: Because of the hard conditions. competitive agriculture in the European markets is almost impossible for us. We have no long-term chance of increasing production. What we do have here are environmentally good conditions. Environmentally friendly farming should be the solution."

There is a mechanism that would allow farmers to continue, or return to, truditional farming, namely to designate the places they farm as environmentally sensitive areas, or ESAs. Under this arrangement. farmers can be recompensed if they choose to farm in a prescribed manner: one that is less-profitable but environmentally friendly.

The heart of the Spanish Steppes Campaign is to have the crucial areas of the steppes declared ESAs. "The traditional way of farming maintains the productivity of the land. When they try to force intensification by irrigation, this system is broken. Carlos Martin, the conservation officer of SEO, says. "The land loses its value. If you irrigate and fertilise and use pesticides, you will have good crops for three or four years. But in a few years the entire area will be useless. It is not economic sense for the farmers. That is why most of them

I want to make it clear that we are not pointing the finger at Spain: we are not saying that Spain is the poor man of Europe. in environmental terms," Mike Parr, the development officer at ICBP, says. "In fact, in some important aspects of conservation. Britain's record is far worse."

The campaign will involve lobbying the Spanish government, persuading them to designate five main areas as ESAs, further lobbying in Brussels and spreading information on the concept of ESAs to Spanish farmers. British conservationists will encourage the British government to support the steppes' cause during its presidency of the EC.

This is a test case for the European Community." Mr Part says, "It is an issue that asks crucial questions about the twin objectives of development and conservation. If the EC can get it right here, then we can get it right elsewhere in Europe too."

"Until now, we know the great bustards lived here, but we didn't pay any attention to each other." Senor Martin says. "Now we realise the importance of these big birds, and we have a chance to show them to the rest of the people. It is not just a question of free money - we also have a chance to do something for In the field behind him, a lone great bustard paced pompously through the corn, a gloriously whiskered male, an avian heavyweight in white and coppery-gold - and an ancient part of an ancient agricultur-

Title holders at the palace

The Queen has invited 2,000 sports champions of the past 40 years to celebrate their achievements in style

nly a decidedly bad sport would question the selection of some of the 2,000 British world champions invited to a special Buckingham Palace garden party on July 9 to celebrate 40 years of sporting attainments since the Queen's accession to the throne. So here goes. Geoff Boycott? Has he furtively been developing worldclass skills in some arcane solo sport with world championship status? And Stanley Matthews? Surely he was not still playing in 1966?

Obviously there can be no quibbling with the inclusion of Brian Coldough, winner of the roller-skating world artistic dance championships in 1962, nor with that of Derek Patterson, a member of the world junior bridge championship-winning team in 1989. But Sir Robert Reid, the chairman of British Rail? And Jacques Delors?

Well, July 9 will be day nine of Britain's presidency of the EC, hence the invitation to M. Delors: and Sir Robert is a former winner of the onearmed golf championships. Stanley Matthews may not strictly have been a world champion, but he was undisputedly the best of his day. As for "Sir" Geoffrey Boycott, never let it be forgotten that he was a member of the 1977 and 1981 cricket teams that won the Ashes.

As will be evident, there is umple scope here for liberal selector and armchair arbiter alike. In this respect the party, far and away the biggest assembly of champions held in Britain, is right in the mainstream of great sporting occasions; contentions but Corinthian. However, someone had to be chairman of the selectors, and the job fell to Peter Lawson, the general secretary of the Central Council of Physical Recreation (CCPR), a voluntary and independent umbrella group for a membership of nearly 200 sporting organisations.

"Originally 1 thought in terms of a reception." Mr Lawson explains, "inviting the Queen (who is patron of the CCPR) and Prince Philip (its president), and all the men women with world championship status, or with gold medals at Olympic or Commonwealth games. Having floated this notion, I received a summons to the Palace from Sir Robert Fellowes, the Queen's private secretary, who bowled me over by saying that the Queen and Prince Philip wanted to take the idea even further and hold a garden party. Personally, 1 would have been more than happy with the Albert Hall, but a garden party at Buckingham Palace was beyond my wildest expectations." There will be another commemoration of the 40 years' worth of worldbeaters, in the form of a book. Champions of the Queen, to be published by the Council in July. This takes us year by year through the sporting attainments of the reign. In 1966, for example, the annus mirubilis of national soccer, we also had two more, less well sung champion combinations: in athletics the crosscountry team, and in ice skaring the dance pair of Bernard Ford and Diane Towler. Then there was the indoor bowls champion. David Bryant, who crops up a full 20 years later as one half of the indoor champion pair; in boxing there was the flyweight champion Walter McGowan: in cycling the women's pursuit champion Beryl Burton; in motor cycling Mike Hail-wood, at both 350 and 250cc, and in snooker the durable John Pullman.

From the class of 66: boxer Walter McGowan

The occasion comes, in Mr Lawson's view, at a particularly propitious moment "We have a very good standing in many of the sports," he says. "But, even more important. we have as good a relationship with government as at any time, with a representative of our interests at cabinet level." Mr Lawson's next goal is to start a World Champions' Sports Club, one purpose of which would be to enable young competitors to benefit from the experiences of past champions. "So many of them have such extraordinary stories to tell," he says.

But first there is the July 9 fixture. If it goes off with deceptive ease this will be because. like most sporting pinnacles, it is the result of infinite preparation.

A voice from the wilderness

When America votes, Estelle DeBates is confident she will be a loser

This year's American presidential race may be wide open but one party confidently expects a drubbing in November's poll. The Socialist Workers' Party has already chosen its candidates, but the woman who should have her eyes on Dan Quayle's job has no doubt

Estelle DeBates, aged 32, the party's vice-presidential candidate, says: "President Bush will win again, though he'll be given a tough time by Ross Perot. We're not in the election for votes because social forces would have to be so different for us to win. The aims of The Communist Manifesto won't be realised overnight. But we want to reach out to the small layer of people who are receptive to our ideas and build the leadership of the working class."

Ms DeBates has been in Britain to spread the socialist message and to support the workers' struggle. First port of call in London was an early morning appointment on a picket line outside Stratford Magistrates Court to support two black men accused of beating up two policemen. Somewhat quixotically, she accuses the British police of being given a free rein to terrorise workers.

Later, Ms DeBates addressed students at Queen Mary and Westfield College in the East End. Seated, and reading from a neat set of notes, she seemed a different breed from the unreconstructed members of her party's British namesake, who took exception to her views on the former Soviet Union. She had said that for all its faults it was still a workers' state, though a "deformed" one. To the British faction it was a regime run by bloated bureaucrats who oppressed workers in a system of state capitalism. Ms DeBates is, indeed, an unlikely revolutionary. Although she peppers her conversation with casual references to "Fidel" in Havana she spells out her agenda in the soothing tones of an assured school teacher, "I have confidence in my ideas and I don't think shouting helps," she says, "Civilised discussion is the best way and I always try states." to listen. There are people on the left who are aggressive and frustrated. I'm not and I have total confidence that things will change. I am very patient and know there are big battles workers." Her struggle is hardly helped by America's political system which excludes fringe parties. She says: "The election rules are prohibitive and undemocratic. We have to collect coming that will involve tens of thousands of American

thousands of signatures in every state just to be allowed on the ballot paper. In 1988 we only made the ballot in 17

Life has become a linle easier for the party since a judge awarded them $264,000 (£130,00) in 1986 to compensate for FBI harrassment. But Ms DeBates is sure she is still being watched. Legally they have no right to hound me but it is well known that they keep tabs on people. I am sure I am considered a threat to national security," she says.

In her campaign leaflet Ms DeBates claims her eight years' experience in the clothes industry as her qualification for leadership. Although she dropped out from the University of Minnesota, she could presumably have secured a better job than as a seamstress. But she took the job for "political reasons". She says: "I didn't let on about my education. I wanted to be part of the industrial working class to see what is happening. Socialists who don't take part in discussions with workers think they are beaten down and see the future as bleak. I don't feel that way at all."

She used to support the Democrats, but became disillusioned. "I grew up on a farm in South Dakota and my family felt the full force of the depression in the 1970s. This roused my interest in politics and I went to work for the Democrats at the age of 19 as they were meant to be the party for workers. I soon quit. They just paid lip service to the thousands of people losing Ronald Reagan's meddling in Central America and the Nicaraguan revolution spuried Ms DeBates into the socialist cause. She still visits the region and has great affection for Cuba. "I may not agree with all that Fidel does but I have tremendous respect for him and I think he is a popular leader. He has led an internationalist cause. Sending Cuhan troops to Angola was a fine example of

These sentiments contrast with her contempt for Ameri-ca's leaders. "The United States is the epitome of what is wrong with the world. There is a deep social and political crisis and Ross Perot's success stems from the failure of the two parties to solve these problems."

Not surprisingly, she vehe-mently oppposed the war in the Gulf, though this was not out of sympathy for Saddam Hussein. "The Gulf war was the opening of World War Three and revealed the complete crisis of world capitalism We put ourselves in the shoes of workers in Iraq and the war was certainly not in their interest. Saddam's invasion of Kuwait was just for his interest, but American imperialism made things worse. The US will continue to use its unparalled military might against anyone that threatens agreeable hotels. For an evening stroll the beach at Dieppe is hard to

A little less crowded are the beaches of the small resorts tucked into the cliffs of the Alabaster Coast, between Dieppe and Le Havre. The most attractive is the beach at Erretat, flanked with the fantastic cliff formations of the Falaise d'Aval and the Falaise d'Amont where the sea cut and carved great arches in the rocks.

These are family resorts, places for buckets, spades and fishing nets. Deauville, on the other hand is smart; make that very smart. The morning stroll along the beach at Deauville is likely to be enlivened by the galloping of racehorses or polo ponies. After that, the very smart crowd rests under a great cloud of umbrellas or shelters in beach huts, each named after a film star or celebrity.

The beaches on the western side of the Orne river, past the port of Ouistreham, attract visitors for another reason. These are the beaches of D-Day 1944, still known by their code names, Sword and Juno and Gold. Just past the harbour of Port-en-Bessin lies the four-mile strand of Omaha beach and half-way up the east coast of the Cotentin lies Utah beach, where holidaymakers give way to portly gentlemen in blazers and regimental ties, standing quietly in little groups before memorials to their

Those who like to find out-of-the-way beaches, ideal for picnics and sunbathing need look no further than the western coast of the Cotentin, south of Cherbourg. This is the most attractive coast of Normandy and contains the harbour at Port Racine, the smallest in France.

This is the Atlantic now and the tides are high and fast, so beach warnings should be observed. Carteret and the twin resort of Barneville have good sandy beaches and estuaries popular with yachtsmen, but my favourite beach resort here is Portbail, which lies in a small bay amid a wilderness of blue sea and sand dunes.

To the south the beaches ge longer and wider around the bay of Mont St Michel and into Brittany. where there are quiet sandy north of Cancale, its oysters, and d'Oleron are in easy reach of the mainland. The most popular beach hereabouts, however, is the one at Les Sables d'Olonne. South across the Gironde estuary around the headland to St Malo. Wise beach-buffs will cross the

Biarritz was once a very fashionable watering hole and still has its devotees who come to stroll among the hydrangeas, and dine at Le Galion or the Café de Paris, but most of the younger ones are more interested in the surfing, for which Biarritz provides the finest facilities and some of the biggest waves in

The Spanish frontier and the Pyrenees now lie ahead but there is still one more attractive beach resort before the Bidassoa, at St Jean de Luz. St Jean has a fine, curving, sandy beach and a picturesque harbour full of turny fishing boats and good local food at Le Petit Grill Basque, in the Rue St Jacques - a good place to end this leg of the journey.

Romance to the fore

he whole raison d'être of sport is to have something to talk about afterwards. Conversely, in France conversation is the most popular sport of all. If you expect to score linguistically at this time of year fluency in a broad spectrum of games is advisable.

For centuries France and Eng-land have been batting words to and fro across the Channel. Although French has piled up a big score in the arts (pas de deux. avant-garde, roman à clef) and romance (femme fatale, ménage à trois, crime passionnel), we are well ahead on points in sports vocabu-lary. We have "le football", "le rughy", and "le surf" to our credit, while the opposition has come up with boules croquet, and Grand Prix. We even offered them "le cricket" but it never caught on. "Le tennis" should apparently be chalked up to us. French poached it from English to replace "la paume". ("palm", originally played without racquets - hence the "Jeu de Paume", where the game was played). But we derived it centuries before from "tenez!" (take that!), which is what you said to your opponent when serving (the tennis equivalent to the golfer's "fore"). The French counterpart to Wimbledon in the "Grand Slam" (a fusion of the two languages - in French, "Le Grand Chelem") is Roland Garros, where the French Open is held on terre battue (clay courts, literally "beaten earth") as opposed to la pelouse (lawn).

French has been crucial to the genesis of at least one item in the tennis lexicon, which has a deceptively romantic flavour: "love", as in "40-love". This is probably an English corruption of the French l'oeuf (the egg), representing 0 (similarly the cricketing "duck" was originally "duck's egg"). At Roland Garros you won't however, hear "quarante-l'oeul" but "quarantezéro". If the next three points go to the receiver the score is not "deux" tfor "deuce" i.e. requiring two points to win) but "égalité".

A rugby-playing friend of mine got by very well in France on the strength of a few earthy vulgarities and the occasional rousing chorus of Swing Low, Sweet Chariot. I only played in one rugby match in France and was later informed. "t'as joué comme un pied" (literally, "you played like a foot"). This was not intended as a compliment though.

Rugby followers are sometimes known as "les fanatiques du bailon ovale" to distinguish them from "les fanatiques du ballon rond". Both rugby and football share a number of euphemisms for violent conduct: viril and energique are convenient, particularly when referring to the dangerous play of Les Tricolores (the French team), A ball that is "telegraphed" in English is "télephone" in French II vou hear "à la douche" ("to the shower"), it is kely you are being sent off. Both English and French are indebted to sports for a plethora of metaphors e.g., prendre la balle dil bond: literally, take the ball on the bounce: figuratively, seize an op-portunity. Autruper la balle means to react quickly or think on your feet. "Cest du billant" — 'n's u piece of cake" and "ronu comme une bille" — drunk. "Jar les boules" does not mean "i have the balls" (ready for a game of boulds or petanque), but rather "I'm feet up " Similarly, tu me fous les noutes does not men "please give me the balls" but "you get on my nerves".

porting metaphors among the most fiendishly difficult to translate. There ought to be a prize for a decent (i.e., similarly sporty) translation of "to bat on a sticky wicket", "play with a straight bat", and "hit for six".

For most of July the main topic of conversation in cafes and bars will be the Tour de France, probably the most intellectually respectable of sports. Even the semiotician Roland Barthes devoted an essay to the subject in Mythologies, comparing the epic eveling race to Homer's Odyssey and the heroic theatre of Corneille, "Ces homenes sont des dieux" ("these men aregods"), the remark of one fanatique du cyclisme as the peloton (the "pack") raced by, sums up the French attitude. The American Greg Le Mond used to be known derisively as "un succur de roue" (wheel-sucker) for shrewdly staying in the slipstream of the pacemaker. La pédale is used as a synonym for cyclisme (and pédaleur for cycliste). But take care: êrre de la pédale — homosexual (through association with pede. short for pédéraste). Pédaler dans le choucroute (or le vaouri) is an expression for wasting one's time.

After "Le Tour" is finished you can start talking about "Les J.O." (pronounced "Géo") i.e. Les Jeux few miles off the beaten track in the Dordogne valley lies Cazenac, the elegant château owned by Philippe and Armelle Constant. Part of the 16th-century facade is visible from the driveway, though most of the house was built in the 18th century. Yet only when you stroll round to the rear terrace does the chateau's show off its spectacular view over the river and the hills beyond.

Like the other "Gentilhommières", this is no hotel: there is no reception desk, no porter to carry the bags and hover for a tip. Here you stay with the Constants, as if with friends. They are an instantly likeable couple who bought Cazenac four years ago and have been restoring it since. Their system is flexible if you want to eat out, no problem. However, you might miss the chance to eat food prepared by the Constants' friend Danièle Mazet-Depeuch, a renowned cook who spends part of her time as a private thef to François Mitterrand at the Elysée Palace. Evening meals are usually available at weekends and for style and each with private bathroom. Breakfast can be taken in the magnificent highceilinged kitchen, and there are two dining rooms.

Guests can swim in the pool just below the terrace, play on the tennis court, take a ride in the Constants' horsedrawn trap with its two powerful Postier-Breton horses, go for picnics, or take to the air in a Cessna from a nearby aerodub and fly over 16 of the Perigord's castles and châteaux. Or they may prefer perhaps to visit Sarlat (16 miles) or historical sites at Les Evzies (11 miles) and Lascaux (19 miles: the original caves are closed but a remarkable facsimile is open).

The château sits in extensive grounds. Much of the land is wild, where the horses roam, but there is a field of young walnut trees with a view 10 future income.

The Constants, who have two young children, are happy to welcome guests for short or long stays (£90-£114 double room, bed and breakfast, before discount) and are keen to introduce them to Périgordin food and wine, even to the extent of going to local mar-kets and teaching them how to make terrine de foie eras.

Central funds, local control

enneth Clarke used to say that as the education secretary he did not control any schools. It may be of greater concern to those who consider improved educational standards to be an urgent national priority that central government does not even control the amount of money spent on education.

Instead the total available for education emerges from the arcane processes of local authority budget-making. It is influenced to some extent by the environment department's standard spending assessments (SSA) and is calculated in competition with other pressing local authority priorities. It is also tiable to become a target for high-profile cuts for councillors threatened with charge-capping. Furthermore, the very wide disparities in per-pupil funding figures, ranging from £2.833 in Brent to £1,737 in Solihull, seem to bear little relation to the quality of education provided.

Recent experiments in new systems of local authority taxation have been designed to achieve a greater sense of fairness and to sharpen local authority accountability

financial management and their below-average demands on local residents. However, for highspending councils, the well known gearing effect, whereby all spending above SSA falls on local fax payers, will continue to work with particular force. Experience with the community charge suggests that, where SSAs have been exceeded to the point of capping, central government is as likely to be blamed by local residents as extravagant councillors, even though central government grants may be relatively higher for these authorities. At the same time these may be the authorities with inner-city problems and below-average educational standards.

When the debate on the commumity charge was at its height, concern was expressed over the size of the likely per capita payment by local residents. Michael Mates MP suggested that teachers' pay should be taken out of local authority expenditure. This would have reduced local authority spending by £8.Sbn in 1991/92 or by 22 per cent, thereby making possible a significant reduction in the community charge per head or improving local accountability by raising the proportion of spending covered by local contributions. There were practical objections, not least that it would have undermined the proposals for greater local management in schools.

A more promising variation on Mr Mates's scheme is for central government to fund schools on a per-pupil formula, using local education authorities (LEAs) as funding councils. With local management in schools and delegated budgets becoming the norm, this is to a large extent the present role of LEAs.

Direct funding by central government, however, on a publicly announced per-pupil basis, with possible adjustments for areas where education standards were below average, would for the first time give central government real power to target resources. At the same time, by providing resources on a per-pupil basis, central government would avoid any direct involvement in the day-to-day management of schools. The focus on pupil numbers would also encourage a degree of competition between schools.

ven if per-pupil funding were taken out of local authority budgets, LEAs would be left with control over 20 per cent of the total education budget. LEA and councillor involvement with schools would continue in the vital areas of strategic planning, notably the provision of new schools and decisions on closures, broad admissions policy, capital improvements, special needs, careers service, discretionary grants and transport. LEAs would also need to retain a landlord role over all the educational built estate, although, as recent experience with local management schools (LMS) has shown, schools will keep a high degree of control over their fabric and sites.

In cash terms, the allocation of limited capital resources to thousands of competing schools is the critical organisational challenge and is liable to overwhelm civil servants attached to funding councils. Central government's record of property management has not been very impressive. Very large sums of money can be wasted on ill-judged projects and badly managed maintenance programmes run from the centre, whereas considerable economies of scale can be achieved from the proper management of a sizable built estate by LEAs familiar with the terrain.

The looser relationship now developing between LEAs and schools under LMS would enable local authority officers and elected councillors to contribute a local feel to the education service in a responsive, flexible and cost-effective way, without any need to "meddle" with the activities in the classroom. It is suggested, therefore, that local authority SSAs should provide for building maintenance to schools and other central services provided by LEAs and that capital spending could continue to be treated as at present. The education department could set up an appeals procedure to handle cases where irreconcilable differences arose between LEAs and

If per-pupil funding for schools (including the post-16 sector) were paid for by central government, using LEAs as funding councils, central government would gain direct control over 80 per cent of education funding, and local authority spending in England would be reduced by the equivalent of about £14 billion in 1991/92 or 35 per cent of total expenditure, thus also sharpening local authority accountability.

Central government could for the first time target resources to areas with below-average education standards and local councillors would effectively lose their present power to impose cuts on education spending in the classroom in their attempts to stay below their SSA ceilings. A vital and continuing role for LEAs is desirable in the strategic planning of local educational provision and they might continue to control some 20 per cent of the education budget. Because central government's involvement would be mainly limited to the decision on the per-pupil funding figures, the maximum degree of local autonomy and management flexibility would be achieved compatible with effective central control over by far the greater part of funding. • The author, a Conservative county

Take a breath and sing

The British are in danger losing their culture of song. Does the karaoke machine represent the last, best hope?

IAN BRADLEY

THE aim of yesterday's National Music Day, according to its chief begetter, former arts minister Timothy Renton, was to "blow our trumpets as a nation". I hope, too, that it encouraged some collective exercising of our vocal chords.

Singing of every kind is in serious decline in Britain. Choral societies and amateur operatic groups are folding through lack of members, schools are finding it hard to raise choirs, and many church congregations are struggling to raise their voices with any great gusto, as the recent report of the archbishops' commission on church music showed.

You are likely to get thrown out of a pub if you try and start a singsong while attempts to relieve the tedium of a long car or

In the United States, in contrast, glee clubs are still a popular feature of college

life and American students on exchange visits here often have a much wider repertoire of traditional British songs than most natives. In the rest of Europe national and regional folk-songs are taught in school and sung with unselfconscious pride at weddings, in bars and at openair festivals.

The rich corpus of national and regional songs which we are now in danger of losing in the British Isles constitutes an important part of our cultural heritage which can help to give cohesion and roots to our increasingly fragmented and disjointed society.

Within those areas where a distinct culture still survives, the tradition of community singing is still very much alive. The

Much of the blame for the decline in singing in the rest of the country rests with schools and education authorities. Children emerge from school with hands-on experience of the recorder, glockenspiel and electronic keyboard but with no taste for singing and little if any knowledge of the traditional songs of their nation or region.

Maybe Gilbert and Sullivan

Maybe Gilbert and Sullivan started the rot with those nasty remarks about the fate of amateur tenors in The Mikado and people who sing choruses in public in Ruddigore. If so, they have paid a heavy price. Gone are the days when their works provided the introduction for

Teachers who do try to get children singing
say that it is almost impossible.
Excuses proliferate, ranging from the ubiquitous "My voice is tous "My voice is breaking" to the original "I can't sing, sir, I'm a Catholic", reported to me recently by a teacher in Dundee.

Maybe the karaoke machine will help to bring unused vocal chords back to life and reverse the passivity of so much modern mass entertainment. One of the great glories of the music hall was that it provided a fund of tuneful choruses that could be picked up and hummed, whistled and sung around the streets. This tradition survived until the mid-1970s in television programmes like the much-maligned Black and White Minstrel Show. Now even Radio seems to be playing fewer and fewer singable songs.

Statements do not add up

¬ his week's report by the Audit Commission on provision for pupils with special educational needs presents some alarming findings about special education nationally. In considering the report's findings, it is worthwhile to look back at the Warnock Committee's report of 1978 on special educational needs which spawned the Education Act 1981, which ncorporated many of the comninee's recommendations. Since the act's introduction

n 1983, elements of Varnock's findings which were not included have, never-heless, been used by the Department for Education of local education authorities (LEAs) as the basis for uidance, policies, budgeting nd other responses to the problems of special education. Critical among Warnock's onclusions is the estimate that per cent of children would have what has since become nown as a statement of pecial educational need.

seen used by LEAs at best as a guideline and at worst as a selling for the issue of statenents. A special needs consultation document recently produced by Devon LEA illustrates this practice in operation.

The document says that "there is concern about the high percentage of pupils with statements in Devon" and suggests that "the number of statements for specific learning difficulties is unacceptably high". Indeed, the report says, in Devon in 1983 no Devon pupils had statements for specific learning difficulties there are now more than $30 statements in mainstream schools and the number is rising by 7 per cent a year."

Provision for special educational needs is based on suspect arithmetic

The county's review of its special education which resulted in its consultation document seems to have been triggered by the rise in the number of statements in the county from 2.2 per cent of the school population in 1985 to 3.3 per cent in 1991. The increase in the number of statements for specific learning difficulties, or dyslexia, is the most likely cause.

The claim that the "magic 2

statement numbers might fairly be challenged if the 2 per cent did, in fact, represent reality and was a soundly based estimate. The unnatural clustering of the percentages around 2 per cent in LEAs across the country, as borne out by the Audit Commission's report, casts doubt on that

In other words, simply because most LEAs have 2 per cent of their children statemented does not mean that there are no more who should be statemented. Two per cent is merely the maximum number of statements that many LEAs will allow.

However, what is of greater significance is the basis upon which the 2 per cent was arrived at by Warnock. If the three elements of that basis are examined, its validity becomes very doubtful indeed.

Firstly, the data used in the Firstly, the data used in the late 1970s reflects only the situation which existed at that time, that is, the extent to which LEAs were offering help to children with learning difficulties.

Secondly, by the same token, the figures provided to Warnock by LEAs at the time merely reflect the level of provision available then.

Finally and of greatest significance, the categories of children included in the data were, to a very great extent, a reflection of the learning difficulties accepted to exist at that time. Ten categories were listed in the amended Handicapped Pupils and Special Schools Regulations 1959 and that list did not include

That is not to say that some forms of "specific learning difficulty" were not recognised but it does mean that significant numbers of pupils were excluded. Add to that the growing awareness of dyslexia over the past 20 years and the validity of the 2 per cent figure evaporates.

It is commonly accepted that 10 per cent of children are affected by dyslexia to a greater or lesser degree and a fifth of those are affected enough to justify a statement. On this basis, the estimate for the proportion of statements for all difficulties must now rise to at least 4 per cent of all school children.

The matter will not be resolved until a realistic survey is carried out to establish accurately the size of the problem.

while improvements in the legislation along the lines proposed by the Audit Commission will be welcomed, they will be largely ineffective while LEAs continue to be allowed to flout the present laws with impunity.

The education department must carry the greatest degree of responsibility for its complacency and lack of policing and enforcement of the relevant legislation.

Law enforcement injunctions need no undertaking

Wickes Building Supplies Ltd. Before Lord Reith of Kinkel, Lord Admer. Lord Goff of Chimeley. Lord Jaunces of Tullichesie and Lord Low-

|Speeches June 35! The court's discretion whether or not to require an undertaking in damages in law enforcement actions was not confined to the Crown and applied to other public authorities exercising the function of law enforcement in the circum-stances in Hoffmann-La Roche v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry ([1975] AC 295).

The House of Lords so held in allowing an appeal by Kirklees Borough Council against a decision of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Dillon, Lord Justice Mann and Lord Justice Beldam, (The Times May 1, 1991; [1991] 3 WLR 985) that the council was required to give a cross-undertaking in damages as a condition of the grant of an interlocutory infunction to restrain the respondents. Wickes Building Supplies Ltd. from trading on Sundays in breach of section 47 of the Shops

The House restored the order of Mr Justice Mervyn Davies granting an injunction without requiring the council to give a cross-undertaking (The Times June 1, 1990: [1990] I WLR 1237). The council had brought proceedings under the powers conferred by section 222 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Section 71(1) of the 1950 Act provides: "It shall be the duty of every local authority to enforce within their district the provisions of this Act and of the orders made under those provisions, and for that purpose to institute and carry on such proceedings in respect of contraventions of the said provisions and such orders as aforesaid as may be necessary to secure observance of thereof."

Section 222 of the 1972 Act rovides: "(1) Where a local authority consider it expedient for the promotion or protection of the interests of the inhabitants of their area — (a) they may prosecute or defend or appear in any legai proceedings and, in the case of civil proceedings, may institute them in heir own name . . . "

Mr Stuart Isaacs, QC, Mr Timothy Straker and Mr Neil Calver for the council: Mr Andrew Collins, QC and Mr Paul Lasok for Wickes: Mr Stephen Richards and Mr Nicholas Paines for the Attorney-general, intervening.

LORD GOFF said that on the face of the two statutory provisions, it appeared that proceedings in its own name by way of injunction were open to a local authority in order to secure observance of section 47 of the Shops Act. His Lordship was unable to accept the argument that since, at the date of the Shops Act 1950, the only proceedings which the local ority could then have instituted to enforce the law against Sunday trading were criminal proceedings, section 71(1) should be read as limited to such

Section 71(i) was in very broad terms and it was well capable of embracing any proceeding necessary to secure observance of the Act, including civil proceedings for an injunction which authorities were subsequently empowered to commence in their own name: see R v Braintree DC. Ex parte Willingham (1982) 81 LGR 70) cited with approval by Lord Roskill and Lord Templeman in Stoke-on-Trent City Council v B & Q (Retail)

Lid (The Times May 18, 1984; 1984] AC 754, 768, 776) It was submitted by Mr Collins that it was a specific prerequisite of the exercise of the jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain an nfringement of the criminal law that the defendant plainly had no defence to a criminal prosecution.

No doubt in practice that was usually the case. Sometimes, in-deed, the injunction would be sought following a series of convictions for an offence which carried a financial penalty so small that it did not deter further infringement. Further, as the present case showed, the introduction of a possible Community law defence might transform the situation. It would be startling if the mere fact that the defendant invoked a Community law defence, with sufficient substance, but no more, to escape rejection under the narrowly drawn principle of acte clair should be capable of itself of excluding that useful jurisdiction, thus providing encouragement to those seeking to profit from law breaking activities to adopt that method of prolonging what may prove to be a source of illicit profit. However, his Lordship was un-able to accept Mr Collins' sub-mission. He knew of no authority which supported it. There were cases in which an interlocutory injunction had been granted despite the fact that the defendant was raising a defence to the alleged crime: see Portsmouth City Coun-cil v Richards (The Times November 21, 1988; [1989] 1 CMLR 673] and City of London Corpora-tion v Bovis Construction Ltd (The Times April 21, 1988; (1988) 86

LGR 660a The power to grant injunctions, which now arose under section 37 of the Supreme Court Act 1981. was a discretionary power which should not as a matter of principle be fettered by rules. The existence of an alleged defence was a matter to be taken. into account in the exercise of the court's discretion when deciding whether it was just and convenient that interlocutory relief should be Crown in law enforcement

Turning next to the undertaking in damages which lay at the heart of the present appeal. His Lord-ship first considered the point under English domestic law. That depended upon a proper under-standing of the decision in Hoff-

The question whether the Crown was required in law enforcement proceedings to give such an undertaking was considered in depth in

It was decided, first, that in actions brought by the Crown to enforce or protect its proprietary or contractual rights it should be in no different position from the ordinary citizen and so should be required to give an undertaking in But, second, it was held that different principles applied in cases where the Crown brought a law enforcement action, in which an injunction was sought to re-strain a subject from breaking a law where the breach would be harmful to the public or a section Lord Diplock drew a distinction between two types of proceedings. The first was a relator action in which, once the Attorney-general's consent had been obtained, the relator stood in the shoes of the plaintiff in an ordinary suit between subject and subject, and an undertaking in damages was re-quired from the relator but not from the Attorney-general.

The second was a law enforcement action brought by the Crown: he referred in particular to such an action brought under a statute which provided expressly for enforcement of a provision of the statute by civil proceedings by the Crown, which was the position in Hoffmann-La Roche.

In that case the House was concerned only with the position of the Crown in law enforcement actions. It was not concerned with the position of local authorities which had the function of enforcing the law in their districts in the public interest.

Whether the same principle should be held to apply in the case of public authorities other than the Crown charged with the enforcement of the law fell to be decided in the present case.

The majority of the Court of Appeal concluded that the same principle should not apply in the case of such public authorities.
His Lordship did not find the reasoning of the Court of Appeal persuasive. The main difficulty was that it reduced the principle enunciated in Hoffmann-La Roche to the status of an arbitrary rule; what Lord Justice Dillon had called "a privilege of the Crown". Yet his Lordship did not read the speeches in Hoffmann-La Roche as conferring a privilege on the proceedings. On the contrary he read them as dismaniling an old Crown privilege and substituting for it a principle upon which in Sea #1978; ECR 629; certain limited circumstances, the court had a discretion whether or not to require an undertaking in damages from the Canun as law The principle appeared to relate not to the Crown as such but to the or cranter. Crown when performing a partica-If was submitted by Mr Collins

lar function It was true that in all the seeeches in that easy attention was focused upon the position of the Crown for the obvious reason that it was the position of the Crown which was in issue in that case.

But the considerations which persuaded the House to hold that there was a discretion whether or not to require an undertaking in damages from the Crown in a lay enforcement action were equally applicable to cases in which some other public authority was charged with the enforcement of the law.

In the circumstances, it was difficult to understand why the same principle should not in similar circumstances, apply to other public authorities when enforcer in the public interest. In those circumstances his Lordship could see no material distincpresent case and the Crown in the Hoffmann-La Roche case. It would be an extraordinary uation if a local authority, acting under a statutory duty, was required to give an undertaking in

tion between the council in the

The essential question was whether the court's discretion to require an undertaking in damages in law enforcement actions was confined to cases in which the Crown was plaintiff or should be held to apply to other public authorities exercising the function of law enforcement in the circumstances specified in the Hoffmannla Roche case. In his Lordship's opinion it should be held so to question of the impact of Community law such was the discretion which the courts should have exercised in the present case. So far as was relevant for the purposes of the present appeal, his Lordship did not consider that much weight could be anached to the argument of Wickes that section 47 was inconsistent with article 30 of the EEC Treaty.

The majority of the Court of Appeal had concluded that the mere fact that Wickes might be able to advance such an argument founded upon article 30, which was at least not a groundles argument, compelled the Court of Appeal to require an undertaking particular upon the dension of the European Court of Justice in Case Amministrazione delle Finanze dello Stato e Simmentahi

That decision, although obviously of great importance, was not concerned with the terms upon what interim relief in the form of an interlocatory injunction should that the function of the undertaking in damages required of the council by the Coun of Appeal was to protect the right of Wickes which flowed from the direct effect of article 30 in the ment of the European Court of Justice holding. on the reference to it of Stoke-on-Trent City Council v B & Q pic (The Times July 24, 1990; [199]] Ch 48), that section 47 of the Shops Act was invalid because it was inconsistent with article 30. Accordingly, such an undertak ing was required to give immedi-However, that submission, which was accepted by the Court of appeared to misconceived In Bourgoin SA v Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food (The Times August 3, 1985; [1986] QB 716; it was held by the Court of Appeal that a breach of article 30 would not of itself give rise to a claim in damages by the injured

However, since the decision of the European Court of Justice in (Case C-6/90 and C-9/90) Francovich v Republic of Italy (The Times November 20, 1991; 1992 IRLR 84, there must now be doubt whether Bourgoin was correctly decided. Having regard to Francovich it was right that in the present case the House should proceed on the basis that if, on the reference to it in the Stoke-on-Trent case the European Court of Justice should hold that section 47 was invalid as being in conflict with article 30. the UK might be obliged to make good damage caused to individuals by the breach of article 30 for which it was responsible.

It did not however follow that, in the present case, the council should obliged to give an undertaking in damages as a condition of the grant of an injunction restraining Wickes from acting in breach of section 47

That was because the obligation, if any, on the UK to make good any damage suffered by Wickes would are irrespective of any undertaking in damages given by the council. In the circumstances such an undertaking would be superfluous.

There were two other subsidiary which reinforced the conclusion that the council should not be required to give such an such an undertaking would be to impose an obligation on the counall in indeninity Wickey against damage suffered by it in the event of section 47 being held to be invalid as inconsistent with article 50, irrespective of whether in such circumstances Wickes had a right to such damages; that is, irrespective of whether Bourgoin was wrongly decided.

In other words that question was pre-empted by the requirement of such an undertaking from the

The second was that if, following Francovich there was held to be a right to damages in such cinumstances, the effect of requiring an undertaking from the council would be to impose liability in damages on the council instead of on the Lik which would properly be the party hable. If so it would be wrong that the council, because it had performed statutory duty under national law to enforce section 47, was to find itself under a liability in damages as a result of performing that dury. For those reasons Wickes' argu-ment that the council should be required to give an undertaking in damages had no justification in Community law,

It followed that the judge had been right to decide the qui on the ordinary principles of

Of course, having regard to the weakness of Wickes' challenge to the validity of section 47. he grant of an interlocutory injunction was fully justified on the principles stated by the House in R v Secretary of State for Transport, Ex narte Factoriame Ltd (No 2) (The Times October 12, 1990; [1991] 1 AC 603).

It was also correct to hold that it was a matter within his discretion to decide whether or not to require the local authority to give an undertaking in damages

In so deciding he had to take into account the fact that it was plain that Wickes would, unless restrained, continue to act in contravention of section 47 and that in practical terms proceedings by way of injunction were the only means open to the council to perform its duty to enforce the provisions of section 47.

His Lordship was unable to accept the submission by Wickes that it was an appropriate case for a reference to the European Court of Justice on the issue that Community law required an undertaking in damages.

Lord Keith, Lord Ackner, Lord Jauncey and Lord Lowry agreed. Solicitors: Sharpe Pritchard for Mr M. R. G. Vause, Huddersfield: Metcalfe Copernan & Pettefar. Peterborough: Treasury Solicitor.

Power to hear appeal in insolvency

Before Sir Donald Nicholk, Vice-Chancellor and Sir Michael Kerr [Judgment June 22] Section 375(2) of the Insolvency

Act 1986 did not impliedly exclude the appellate jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Appeal by section 6 of the Supreme Court Act

The Court of Appeal thus had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the refusal of a High Court dge to extend time for appealing to him against a bankruptcy order. The Court of Appeal so held when rejecting a preliminary objection to jurisdiction raised by the respondents, European Credit Co Ltd and the Official Receiver, on an appeal by Marilyn Lawrence against Mr Justice Hoffmann's refusal on November 22, 1989 to grant her an extension of time to appeal against a bankruptcy order made by the registrar in bankruptcy.

Mr Peter Jennings for the appellant: Mr Mark Cannon for

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said that section 375 of the 1980 Act provided: "(2) An appeal from a decision made ... by a county court or by a registrar in bankruptcy of the High Court lies to a single judge of the High Court and an appeal from a decision of that judge on such an appeal lies, with the leave of the judge or of the Court of Appeal, to the Court of

The respondents contended that the judge's refusal to permit an extension of time was not "a decision of that judge on such an appeal" and accordingly that there was no provision for an appeal to the Court of Appeal. They relied on Podberry v Peak [[1981] Ch 344). In that case the Court of Appeal had to construe section 108 of the Bankruptcy Act 1914, the material words of which were: "(2) ... The decision of the Divisional Court upon any such appeal shall be final and conclusive, unless in any case the Divisional Court or the Court of Appeal sees fit to give special leave to appeal therefrom to the Court of Appeal, whose decision in such cases shall be final and

The court held that refusal to permit an appeal out of time was not a decision of the Divisional Court upon an appeal from the county court.

It was to be observed that in Rickards v Rickards (1990) Fam 104, 190) Lord Donaldson of Lymington, Master of the Rolls had said of that case: "This court held, rightly as I think, that the order regusing an extension of time could not be regarded as one made on a hankrupky or any other appeal from the county count because the refusal of an extension of time prevented any such appeal coming into existence.

The appellant relied on the jurisdiction conferred on the Coun Appeal by section 16 of the Supreme Court Act 1981, "Ill Subject as otherwise provided by this or any other Act . . the Cour of Appeal shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order of the High

Counsel pointed to the decision in Rickards v Rickards and submitted that it was authority for the proposition that a refusal by a judge to extend time for an appeal to him was a judgment or order. That was an appeal from the COUNTY COURT.

The material part of section ?? of the County Courts Act 1984 read: "(1) If any party to any proceedings in a county court is dissatisfied with the determination of the judge ... he may appeal from it to the Court of Appeal."

What was submitted, rightly in his Lordship's view, was that the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in Rickards v Rickards was equally applicable to section 16 of the What was said by the respon dents was that section 375(2) of the 1986 Act impliedly excluded rights under section 16 of the 1981

That point was not argued in either Podberre v Peak or Rickards Rickards and was therefore open. but his Lordship was not persuaded by it. He could not believe that section 375(2) intended impliedly to out down any right of appeal otherwise available. He saw no compelling reasons why the two jurisdictions should not co-east: Section 16(1) of the 1981 Act hegan "Subject as otherwise provided..." Section 375(2) could not be read as impliedly containing a contrary provision.

oncurring judgment. Solicitors: Desmond Pyc Partnership, New Cross: Alson

7.30 Classic Adventure: Because It's There. CHOICE: The filmsy excuse for tonight's anthology of derring-do is to explore the reasons why No convincing, or at least original, answers emerge but much daft and dangerous fun is had along the way. Among the sillier forms of self-inflicted adventure must be kayaking down waterfalls, as demonstrated in north Wales in 1990. Three of the participants ended up in hospital, the commentary blandly tells us, but had a great day out and will be back for more. The trouble with these dips into the archives is that they keep interrupting the running story of Robin Knox-Johnston and Chris Bonington as they proceed to:wards an undimbed peak in Greenland. By the end of tonight's episode they are not much further forward and at this rate they will still be approaching the foothilis when the series ends. (Ceefax) (962)

● CHOICE: A four-part series on child geniuses opens with a profile of Katharine Werry from the Midlands who at 14 ran the fastest 100 metres recorded for her age. Two years on, her goal is clear: "My ame tion is an Olympic gold. That is what I am training for and that is what I intend to achieve." More modestly, she accepts she may have to wart until 1996. This summer she takes her GCSE exams and then names for a job that will allow her plenty of time to run. Meanwhile she competes in the European junior championships in Greece and starts favourite for the 200 metres. What might otherwise be a bland story of effortless achievement is brought to eastr by a readmistress who urges Katharine to consider alternatives if the prilliant career does not materialise.  CHOICE. A chilling documentary from Australia rewalls how scores of lives were wrecked by the abuse of a technique pionecied by psychiatrists in Britain for the treatment of the mentally ill D Harry Bailey, who made up with force of personality what he lacked in medical qualifications, started his own form of deep sleen therapy at a private hospital in New South Wales in the 1960s Patients were made unconscious with drugs and during sudation were given daily electric shock treatment without their consent. The film claims that more than 70 people ded either in hospital or soon after their release and many more were brain damaged. Eventually the whistle was blown and Bailey committed suicide in 1985. The question unanswered by the film is why Bailey did it Was it money, power or a perverted belief in his own skill? (2892)
